A ROUSING RALLY.

Immense Republican Meeting at Cooper Institute.

Enthusiastic Manifestation in Favor of the National and State Tickets.

Speeches by Secretary Boutwell, Speaker Blaine, and Others.

Thorough Exposition of the Financial Policy of Gen. Grant.

The Record of His Administration Forcibly Reviewed.

The eighth and last weekly meeting held at the Cooper Institue under the auspices of the Republican State Committee last night, was a worthy close to the efforts of the Empire City for Gen. Grant's re-election. At 6½ o'clock, the streets and avenues around the Institute were thronged by persons of every social grade, anxiously watching the doors in the hope of getting good seats. When 7 o'clock came, the hall was thrown open, and such a rush was made that the flooring and stage trembled under the pressure. In ten minutes there was not room for another being in the auditorium. The stage, too, was fully occupied by the best men in the business community. After the round of applause which greeted the advent of the distinguished orators of the evening, Secretary Boutwell and Speaker Blaine, A. H. Cornell nominated Hon. Isaac H. Bailey for President, who said that, in view of the fact that Mr. Blaine's campaign had had a serious effect on his voice, he should make but few remarks, and asked the further pleasure of the meeting.

Gen. Sharpe then read the following list of Vice-Presidents:

REMARKS OF THE CHAIRMAN.

Mr. Bailey said: Ladies and Gentlemen—We have with us to-night a distinguished officer of the Government, who comes forward to give an account of his stewardship. There have been some complaints of the interference of Federal officials in this election, but I think it a good sign that the chief officer of the Government comes here, ready to give you a statement of the affairs confided to his care; and I think he will give such an account as will convince you that this Government deserves, as it will have, a triumphant re-election. I have the pleasure of introducing Hon. Mr. Boutwell.

SPEECH OF HON. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL.

Mr. Boutwell was received with tremendous applause, the ladies waving their handkerchiefs and the gentlemen their hats as he stood up to speak. He said:

A month since, ladies and gentlemen, I should have come upon this platform feeling more than I do the importance of the discharge of the duty which I am expected to perform to-night. Within that month the judgment of the people of this country has been so far expressed that a meeting of Republicans now is rather an assembly of triumph than an occasion for argument with reference to the result of the canvass. If the elections in North Carolina, and in Vermont and Maine—[applause]—did not prove satisfactorily to the friends and the opponents of the present Administration, that Gen. Grant was to be elected, no doubt can exist now in the mind of any reasonable person, since the expression of opinion in the great central States of the Union, from which there can be no successful appeal. [Applause.] Various reasons have been given by our opponents for the results; but I have not seen stated by them what seems to me to be the true one. The truth is to be found in the fact that the people of this country act upon their serious and earnest convictions of political affairs, and not as the followers of individual men—much less do they act under the influence of passion or of prejudice; and, therefore, they have considered the statements of our opponents, and the arguments and facts of the friends of the Administration, and the result is before the country, and before the world. [Loud applause.] I do not consider it out of place, gentlemen, for me to speak of the President in his personal and official character, but I shall not speak of the calumnies of which he has been the subject.

THE CALUMNIES AGAINST THE PRESIDENT.

I remember that in all the trying periods of the country's history, the men who have been charged with great duties have also been assailed. You, in your own family history, know that the great chief whom your fathers placed in the most honorable positions of public service was himself the subject of calumny; but the justification—aye, the satisfaction, even, which comes to the country, as well as to the subjects of these calumnies, is in the just judgment of the people, who, when the facts are laid before them, see to it that no permanent injuries remain. And so those great men of the past escaped without the smell of calumny upon their garments; and so will it be of him today, who, after great public service, is assailed in the heat of a political canvass. The calumnies will be forgotten. [Applause.] Happy the men who originated them if they, too, shall be permitted to pass into oblivion. If some of you have seen the President, whether as General of the army, as General of the armies of the Republic, or since he has been Chief Magistrate of the nation, you have seen him as he always is, quiet, decorous, unassuming in all his relations of public and private life. That sentence I utter after an acquaintance with him of eight years, and after an intimate acquaintance of three and a half years. Under no circumstances does shall I stoop to mention the nature of the calumnies now alleged against him, but I come to speak of his character.

GEN. GRANT'S CHARACTER.

It is said that he is not a man of intellectual capacity; a man who has lived forty years in a country where the avenues to distinction are open alike to every man. Like Cromwell, who, you will remember, came in the exigencies of the public service to be the protector of England, and who became entitled to weigh in international and international affairs of the continent of Europe, whatever may, after two centuries, be the judgment of men as to the wisdom of his policy, there is none as to the nature of his intellectual endowments. It would be strange in the century if in a time of great national trial no man were found to take the command of a million of men, and who commanded them successfully, and who carried the nation through a severe contest, if there should rest any doubt upon the minds of the people of that generation whether he has intellectual capacities which possess those qualities which belong alike to the soldier and the statesman—freedom from passion, absence of all malice, capacity to select men for important service, and he possesses the "roundabout common sense" quality in man which, without irreverence, I think may be described as something near to, if it be not absolutely, infinite power with reference to a limited thing, which enables the possessor or that power to see the subject under investigation precisely as it is, and then he possesses the capacity to act on his judgment in time to meet the requirements of the case.

THE GIFT OF PUBLIC SPEECH.

Now it is a circumstance worthy a moment's consideration that Gen. Grant is not gifted in public speech; and what good fortune it would be for the time if they failed in the same respect. Gentlemen, there is no necessary connection between the ability to speak in public and to administer public affairs; and, indeed, I think it may safely be said in the teaching of history and the result of experience that men who are largely endowed with capacities in that direction, and who cultivate them assiduously, are by that natural endowment and that training unfitted for the serious substantial business of statesmanship in times of peril. An old English writer has said: "Words are the children of men. The works of God are deeds; and therefore it is that the man of deeds is always greater than the man of words." [Applause.]

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE COUNTRY.

If I interpret correctly the introductory remarks of the Chairman of this meeting, I am expected to say something upon the finances and the financial condition of the country. I know not precisely how to meet that request, certainly within the limits of the few moments which I propose to occupy. You know very well all the leading facts of the Administration in that particular; although sometimes our friends, and often our enemies, have imagined that there was something they did not see yet. If anything is true concerning the administration of the Treasury Department it is this: what we have done we have done openly. [Applause.] Gen. Grant, you may remember, in his inaugural address, looked with reference to the finances to two results—a faithful collection of the revenue and payment of the public debt. In these three and a half years, following that suggestion, the country has paid more than three hundred and fifty millions dollars of the public debt. [Applause.] In the mere fact that the debt has been reduced in that extent there may be no great merit. The advantage is chiefly in the establishment of the public credit, and the assurance it gives to the country and to the world that the purpose of the people of the United States is to place the Government free of any responsibility of a pecuniary sort which cannot be met even under adverse circumstances.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

As to the national debt, I remember Mr. Webster, in some moment of great freedom, made a remark like this: "Public debts should be paid, but private debts—that is a different thing." [Laughter.] Gentlemen, there is an aspect of this question which public men have to concern than private debts. If I were to give advice, and as I give it freely and without charge there can be no complaint, and I hope no one will bring it home to me if the result is not accomplished, but I do say that whoever can limit property on credit and hold on, will realize a profit. But with a Government the question is different. In this country the national credit lies at the foundation of everything. Today if the public credit were impaired for any reason, the credit of railways, the credit of banks, of savings institutions, would be impaired if not undermined and prostrated. Therefore it has seemed to the Administration necessary to take the best possible security for the establishment and maintenance of the public credit. This could only be done by stating to the country, and to the world that we had the means and the disposition to pay. The advantages of this policy are not only in the present, but they are certain in the contingencies of the future. No nation can be free from the possibility of war. Our nation is as invulnerable as united to escape such calamities as any nation on the face of the earth, and especially now, when the only great question which threatened the peace of the United States has been removed. [Cheers.] But every nation must look to the possibility of war. War cannot be carried on except by loans. Loans cannot be made except the credit of the party asking the loan is good. Now, then, the result of the policy that has been pursued is this, that today the credit of the United States is better than the credit of any other nation on the face of the earth. [Applause.] Don't be ready to doubt the truth of this observation by the circumstance that France has recently made a large loan, at the rate of five per cent. interest, with subscriptions vastly in excess of the amount called for. The truth in regard to that loan is that it was sold to the bankers who put it upon the market at the rate of eighty-four cents on the dollar, while the Government of the United States within the last twelve months, has disposed of two hundred millions of five per cent. bonds, without any discount in the principal markets of Europe. [Cheers.] Secondly the bonds of the United States are salable at or above par in more markets of the world than the bonds of any other country. The advantage of this lies in the fact that if the Government of the United States should ask for a loan abroad the capitalists of Europe would only be too glad of the opportunity to lend us money.

INTERNAL REVENUE RECEIPTS.

A large part of the means for thus reducing the public debt has been derived from the more [illegible] collection of the public revenues. I am not willing nor would your patience permit me to present a statement of facts for the purpose of demonstrating this. But I can say in one sentence that which is true, and as conclusive as a volume of arguments and statistics, that in the first year of Gen. Grant's administration the receipts from internal revenue taxes were increased forty-seven per cent. over the revenue derived during the last year of Mr. Johnson's Administration upon all the articles which were taxed in both years. [Cheers.] During the period of Gen. Grant's Administration the system of taxation has been so changed that the aggregate reduction of revenue due to these charges amounts to about one hundred and fifty millions of dollars. Two things have been thus accomplished simultaneously, a reduction of taxation and an increase of revenue from the same sources, and a consequent reduction of the public dept.

Passing from this subject, gentlemen, I proceed briefly to say that while there have been some defalcations by public officers, the amount is not large compared with the revenues collected. During the period of Gen. Grant's Administration we have collected more than $600 000,000 revenue through the Customs, and not one dollar of this, so far as is known, has been lost to the Government by any misconduct of the Customs officers. There have been four or five cases of criminal misapplication of the public money, or misuse of the public money through ignorance of the law, and in each of these cases the Government has been reimbursed either by the party himself or by proceedings against his sureties. During the entire period of the internal revenue system, from 1862 to July, 1872, the loss by defalcations was $2,700,000 on a total collection of more than $1,500,000. As a matter of opinion, I may state that of these defalcations about nine hundred thousand dollars is chargeable to the appointees of Mr. Lincoln, one million seven hundred thousand dollars to the appointees of Mr. Johnson, and less than one hundred thousand dollars to the appointees of Gen. Grant. [Applause.] We do not defend these things. I stand here to say that, in all these cases, the Administration condemned the offense, pursued the offender, and, if possible, convicted him, and subjected him to the punishment meted out to him by the law.

QUESTIONS OF POLICY.

I pass now, gentlemen, from matters of administration in the Treasury Department to questions of policy, which have been of Gen. Grant. I do not propose to speak of Mr. Greeley, except so far as it may be necessary to the argument which I am about to present; but it is known to all men that very early after the inauguration of Gen. Grant he pressed publicly upon the Secretary of the Treasury his policy in reference to the finances of the country, and that having been general, it is no breach of confidence for me to say that privately he pressed the same views on me. His ideas were these—that coin in the Treasury should be used to pay the interest and for the payment of the interest-bearing debt, and that the Government should resume specie payments. In the first lesson of Colburn's Intellectual Arithmetic there is a question that, as a question, is very simple, but as a question with reference to the philosophy of education, a very important one. It is this: How much is two and two have you on your right hand? [Laughter.] If there is a boy in the public schools of New-York who has successfully met that introduction to intellectual arithmetic, to that boy I would trust the question whether these two propositions of Mr. Greeley, considered together, are not so absurd as to be wholly impracticable. Sell the coin in the Treasury and resume specie payments. [Laughter.] But I will consider them separately, because it may be allowed that while he recommended both these, he recommended them in the alternative, therefore I will deal with them separately. First to sell the coin in the Treasury and apply the proceeds to the payment of the public debt. We have $356,000,000 of United States notes, known as greenbacks, in circulation. They are issued upon the condition and upon the understanding that they are, as soon as practicable, to be made equal in value to coin. Therefore the public opinion as to whether we are providing the ways and means by which at some future time they will thus be made equal, is an essential element in fixing their commercial value. If we sell $356,000,000 of these notes in circulation, and we sell the coin that is in the Treasury today, that policy, if it be wise, requires that any future accumulations of coin shall likewise be sold, and the result is that these notes are never to be made equal to specie in value with the people of the country in paper money was never greater. Our exports are equally on the increase. The traffic between this country and other countries is likely to increase—first by the increased production of articles for exportation, and especially of cotton. The entire cotton of the world is not equal to one dollar in gold for each inhabitant. I pause here for a moment to say with reference to the South's demand for conciliation, that it does not include the safety and contentment of the laboring classes of the South. [Cheers.] If by a policy which would conciliate two or three hundred men who were prominent in the rebellion, and that by that work of conciliation you disturb the millions engaged in the production of cotton, depriving the South of labor which it requires, you will suffer in the loss of lands and business to the extent of tens of millions of dollars. [Cheers.] Moreover, the importation from Europe of certain articles of commerce has been increasing. The policy we have pursued has not only had an elevating tendency, but it induced immigration from England. But this policy of advancing labor has not applied to that country alone, but to the other States of Europe. We have, besides, been constructing railways at the rate of six million dollars or seven million dollars a year. Secondly, we have succeeded in increasing the production of iron in this country and diminishing the importation of it from abroad, thereby reducing the balance against us. [Cheers.] Waiting, then, as we must wait, for chances to take place to bring their fruit for us, that time is not far distant when the paper money in the United States will be equal to coin.

What would be the result of that third policy when justified by Mr. Greley, which is, as you know, "Resume"? Mr. Greeley had a maxim, which was, "The way to resume is to resume." [Laughter.] With $356,000,000 of paper money in circulation, payable on demand, and with $93,000,000 in the Treasury—the largest sum we ever had—what would be thought if we were to post up on the Treasury door the words, "To resume is to resume"? Therefore, it seems to me that if you are satisfied with Gen. Grant's ideas on these questions, you should trust to his Administration. Allow me to say, in conclusion, that in my opinion, as it is that of every man conversant with the course of trade in this country, that, as the financial interests of this country are represented by New-York City, it will become, twenty-five years hence, the financial centre of the world. The speaker then retired, amid prolonged applause.

The Chairman then introduced Hon. James G. Blaine, who spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF SPEAKER BLAINE.

MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: When the Constitution of the United States was framed in 1787, Mr. Jefferson was in Europe representing this country at the Court of France, and he returned, as you know, to take part in the Administration of Gen. Washington. Upon his suggestion the State of Virginia proposed to the Constitution of the United States eleven amendments, to protect in better form, as Mr. Jefferson thought, personal rights. The eleven amendments were perfected during Gen. Washington's first term, and were known publicly in that day as the Bill of Rights. Twelve years afterward there was an animated contest for the Presidency between Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Adams, first before the people, and afterward still more embittered between Jefferson and Aaron Burr in the House of Representatives, and the end of that contest disclosed that one feature of the Constitution did not work well, in relation to the mode in which electors should vote for President and Vice-President; and, to remedy the defect thus developed, a twelfth amendment was proposed to the Constitution. That amendment was perfected in 1802, and from that day to the Administration of Abraham Lincoln the Constitution remained unchanged and untouched. [Cheers.] The framers of that instrument purposely made it difficult to alter or amend it. Legislation was left to the will of the majority, favorable or adverse; but to change the Constitution, as you all know, it was made to require a vote of two-thirds of the Senate and two-thirds of the House to as much as propose an amendment, and then three-fourths of all the States to ratify it before it should be incorporated into the organic instrument.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Sixty-three years after the Twelfth Amendment a Thirteenth Amendment was added; and it has been the amazing fortune of this generation, which will never be experienced by any that succeeds it, to have amended the Constitution of the United States in three particulars. Neither to generations of the fathers or the grandfathers of most of those whom I now have the honor to address—you must go back to your great-grandfathers before you reach the generation that changed a single line of that instrument. And yet we, of today, have made three great essential changes to that Constitution.

Seven years after the last hostile gun was fired in the civil war, you are asked to point out what remained as the fruits of that struggle. What answer have you to give? The physical union of the States was, of course, maintained; the rebels were beaten and dispersed; but when you come to speak of the living present and forecast the future, you point to the great radical changes in your organic law as the fruits of that great struggle; for in Mr. Lincoln's term was perfected the great Thirteenth Amendment, which, in three short lines, abolished slavery throughout the whole land, and prohibited slavery to all time thereafter, thereby making it forever impossible, in the language of a great man now dead, that a slave could breathe the air of the United States and live. [Cheers.]

But, this amendment perfected, it was soon found that merely declaring a man not to be a slave did not constitute him a free man; in other words, it did not endue and endow him with the power to maintain himself in his new condition; and the same difficulty that existed before the war confronted us afterward, when the Thirteenth Amendment was in your Constitution. What difficulty was, that nowhere in that instrument was there declared, and nowhere was there acknowledged, a common standard of American citizenship. It was written in the old Constitution that the citizens of each State should be entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States. And, as between the great States that swept the North from ocean to ocean, that guarantee was fulfilled; but the moment you crossed the imaginary line South, and having a dark complexion it availed you nothing; and no matter how white your complexion, if you undertook in certain Southern States to exercise the right of free speech, the heritage which belongs to New-Englanus, and to great free States of old, your life was no more worth than the life of a dog. This was no theoretical grievance. It fell upon us in many practical and offensive ways. My own State, largely devoted to navigation, shared in its insults and outrages. A Maine ship going to Charleston for a cotton freight might well have among her crew two or three colored men. On the arrival at Charleston, these colored sailors were arrested, imprisoned and detained while the ship remained in port. The ship had to pay the expenses of their maintenance, and should she depart without defraying their expenses, the men might be sold into hopeless slavery in order to raise the amount. But if on the same day a British ship should arrive in the harbor of Charleston with an entire crew of negroes, they were as safe in that city as you are today in the City of New-York. Thus it was that the British flag in an American port carried a larger measure of personal protection than the American flag did. This was so outrageous a grievance that the State of Massachusetts, foremost always in good, sent to Charleston one of her most eminent and distinguished citizens, the late Samuel Hoar. The older portion of this audience remember the result of that mission. It was met by an infuriated mob, and had it not been for the considerate interference of some of the better disposed citizens of that city his blood might have been spilt in its streets, to the eternal infamy of the name of Charleston.

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

Thus when the war began and thus when the war closed, there was no standard of American citizenship; for the ground on which South Carolina attempted this disqualification was that neither Maine, nor New-York, nor Massachusetts had the right to make a man a citizen who could not call himself a citizen within the limits of South Carolina. At the beginning of the war and at its close this great question of American citizenship was an unsettled and vexed question. Therefore the Republican Party took the next great step, and proposed to the States, through their representatives in Congress a Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution declaring to remove the evils of which I have spoken; and I venture to say, with deliberate weighing of my words, that from the hour in which the immortal Declaration was made at Philadelphia in 1776, there has been no word of organic or State law written on this continent of more far-reaching import to you and your children and your children's children than the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. [Cheers.] Allow me to read it. It is as follows:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the conditions thereof are citizens of the United States."

Mark you, all persons born, no matter what color, and all persons naturalized, no matter what nativity, "are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside." That is the affirmative and positive part of the amendment. The negative part is still more potential and still more pregnant. It is as follows:

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, or liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall any State deny to any person within its jurisdiction the just and equal protection of the law."

And then these singular words are added:

"And Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this amendment."

There you have the great features—first, the positive declaration of what should constitute American citizenship; second, the taking away from the States of all power to interfere with these rights; and, third, the delegation to Congress in express terms of all power necessary to protect these rights.

Now, under that a case arose, and a case of great magnitude, and it arose thus: When the war closed, the most sanguine among us could hardly expect that there would immediately ensue law and order in the South. The tumult had been too great; passions had been too deeply stirred, and therefore it was naturally expected, and a due charitable allowance was given to a certain degree of disorder, and possibly to a certain measure of strife and anarchy. But it was soon found that no charity was broad enough to cover that which ensued; for this disorder, instead of being temporary, became chronic; instead of being sporadic and accidental, it became organized, and throughout the length and breadth of the States then recently in revolt there was found a vast conspiracy against the rights of person and property of all those who had shown peculiar devotion and peculiar loyalty to the Government of the United States, and within six years, measuring from the day that Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant, down to the month of April, 1871, by the report of a Congressional Committee, made up of members of the Senate and of the House, selected from both parties because of their character and ability—a report in the archives of the Government today, showing that within these six years in the States that had been in revolt, there were 23,000 men who were made the victims of this conspiracy by being either maimed, maltreated or murdered, and more than six thousand mercilessly murdered—more than three per day from the time that Lee gave up his sword to the 1st day of April, 1871. Then it occurred to Gen. Grant as the administrator of the law to see whether or not, under the power as given by the Fourteenth Amendment, there might not something be done to check these outrages and protect American citizens in their rights. He sent a message to Congress recommending such legislation. That message was referred to a select committee. In due time the committee reported a bill, and in due time that bill was enacted into a law, and has since become famous as the Kuklux law. During its pendency in the House, and during a somewhat prolonged and embittered debate upon its merits and provisions, and possibly when its fate was not altogether sure, we experienced invaluable aid in securing it supporters from the great influence and potent name of the editor of the New-York Tribune, Horace Greeley. He wrote in the Tribune, under his own signature, as follows:

"Let our Government, bound by its duty of protecting our citizens in their fundamental rights, pass and enforce a law for the extirpation of the Kuklux conspiracy, and if our Government has not the power to do that, then I say it is no Government all—but a sham."

That was Horace Greeley before he was afflicted with Presidency on the brain. [Laughter.] As I have said, that bill became the subject of a prolonged and embittered debate, more lengthy in point of time and in the number of speeches that were made in the House of Representatives than any debate since the debate on the Legal-tender bill in 1862. I think there were more than fifty speeches on the Democratic side of the House against it. I heard them all, and have refreshed my memory with them since from the Globe, and I here deliberately assert that the common thread of argument running through all those speeches was that legislation of that kind was the destruction of the doctrine of local self-government, and was the centralization in the hands of the Federal Government of the power that belonged to the States. That was so often repeated that it has now assumed the position of a watchword and catch phrase, that it was the destruction of local self-government, and the centralization in the hands of the Federal Government of the power that belonged to the States. On that issue the Republicans frankly met them. They said, "We meet you upon that issue, and admit that it was the purpose, the aim, the object and intent of the Fourteenth Amendment to centralize in the hands of the Federal Government all power necessary for the protection of the individual citizen." [Cheers.] And it was their object to declare that citizenship of the United States should no longer be the foot-ball of controversy between the States, and that hereafter it should be thenceforward and for ever a matter of supreme national concern everywhere, and it was a very amazing circumstance that that question should even be debated in an American House of Representatives. It was amazing from the fact that from all time since we have been a nation we have been prompt to guard the rights of our citizens who were interfered with by foreign governments. I shall not detain you with precedent-incidents in which, with great alacrity, this Government has stood forward to assert the rights of citizens who were imprisoned in the foreign Governments. But out of the vast multitude that might be quoted, I will just call your attention to one single case. Twenty years ago this case happened. After the abortive revolution in Germany in 1848, among those who sought shelter on these shores was a refugee from Hungary. He came here, and as soon as he arrived he filed his declaration to become a citizen of the United States. Shortly afterward he was called back to Europe upon business. He had not perfected his naturalization, and had not even acquired a domicile here. But when he arrived in Asia Minor he was arrested by an Austrian official, and was about to be carried to Vienna to be tried for a political offense. He appealed to the American Consul for protection, and the Consul referred the case to Capt. Ingraham, of the United States Navy, who was then in the harbor of Smyrna with a vessel of war. Capt. Ingraham examined the case, and made up his mind that the man was entitled to protection, and accordingly he sent word to the authorities that unless Martin Kosta was not on board his vessel in twelve hours he would bombard the city, and he was placed on board and brought to us here in triumph to this country. William L. Marcy, then Secretary of State, and one of the eminent statesmen of the past generation, whose name I am sure is respected and venerated in the State of New-York, wrote an able State paper vindicating the right to such protection. But, when, although it was somewhat caviled at, was never successfully answered; so that it has passed into a precedent that a man who in good faith flies a declaration of intention to become an American citizen shall have the protection of the American Government. Now for a Republican precedent. This very last Winter this case happened. During the somewhat languid revolt that has been in progress in the Island of Cuba against the Spanish Government for three or four years, there fell under the displeasure of that Government, one John O'Néil Housell, who was interested for complicity, tried by a drumhead court-martial, found guilty, and sentenced to transportation to a penal colony on the coast of Africa, under a tropical sun, for a long period of years, a punishment worse than death. He appealed to the Government for protection, and his case was brought before the House of Representatives by a distinguished member from Philadelphia, Hon. Samuel J. Randall. He claimed protection on these grounds: His father was an immigrant from France, who came to Philadelphia about the year 1800, was naturalized, his naturalization carrying with it that of his minor children, of whom this man was one. He grew up to manhood, studied medicine, took his degree, and moved to the Island of Cuba thirty-three years before his arrest. He never remained there long enough to vote, to acquire a domicile, or to pay a tax. In all those thirty-three years he never had been back. He had even lost the power to speak the English language, and appealed to the Government in the Spanish tongue. But his father was naturalized in good faith, and that conferred upon him minor children the rights of citizens; and on that state of facts the House of Representatives, by a marked majority, passed a resolution requesting President Grant to demand that man from Spain—not upon the ground that he was innocent of the charge, because that the House of Representatives knew nothing of, but on the ground that as an American citizen he was entitled to be tried under certain treaty stipulations, and not having been so tried he was not legally tried. Under instructions from the State Department Gen. Sickles demanded of the Spanish Government the release of this man. They faltered, hesitated, haggled, and offered to pardon the man. But Gen. Sickles was instructed not to accept pardon, because a pardon was evidence that the man had committed a crime and was guilty, and was only evidence of royal clemency on the part of the Spanish King; whereas, what was demanded was justice to an American citizen. When they found that Gen. Sickles refused to accept for him a pardon, the Spanish Government finally gave him up, and the man came back under the panoply of an American citizen, as free as you and I are today. In this respect our Government has taken an advanced ground. We may place France alongside of us; but we cannot boast ourselves a better than the Government of England in that respect. I have not a particle of Anglo mania; I have no special love or admiration for her beyond what the law demands, yet I will not withhold my meed of admiration for what England has always done in supporting the rights and protecting the privileges of the individual subject. You will remember this case, that has scarcely passed out of the memory of the readers of the daily papers. Four or five years ago, four British merchants, in the pursuit of lawful gain, worked their way into the heart of Abyssinia. When there, they were seized by King Theodore, their property confiscated and their persons imprisoned. England resented it. She tried all the arts of diplomacy in vain. She threatened in vain. Then what did she do? Did she leave these men to their fate? Not at all. When diplomacy failed, and threats were of no avail, she sent a great army up the Mediterranean, down the Red Sea, and across the burning and blasting desert, and amid the flames and ruins of the capital of Abyssinia, and by the corpse of the half savage King, at an expense of $60,000,000, she brought these four merchants in triumph back to their homes in London. There England stands, and there we stand, ready, as we have always stood, to avenge the wrongs and enforce the rights of all our citizens, so that I may say, with some extravagance of expression, that it has come to be known everywhere that any foreign Government daring to lay its hand in power on the shortest hair of the boldest and the weakest American citizen, [laughter,] we stand ready to defend his rights at the mouth of the cannon or by the point of the sword. But I cannot make myself comprehend how it is that a Government that has an army long enough and strong enough to reach to the Mediterranean and snatch Martin Kosta from the hands of the Austrian power, or to take Dr. Houard from the hands of the Spanish Government, shall yet be told that if you and I have our rights interfered with, our persons wronged, our property imperiled, on the soil of South Carolina or Alabama, the Federal Government must not be asked to interfere, because that would be destroying the great Democratic doctrine of local self-government. The Democratic Party are just in this position—that while the rights of the citizen to be fully protected by the United States is good when he is beyond the limits of this country, in England, France, Austria or Spain, and will follow him up with an army with banners and avenge him, yet he may go down to South Carolina, and there be beaten with stripes, and warned to leave on the penalty of being, in thirty-six hours, hung upon the nearest tree, and the Greeley party say, "For God's sake, don't appeal to the Federal Government; don't trample on the rights of local self-government." What's the Kuklux law? It covers several pages of our statutes, but boiled down, the quintessence of it is just this, that wherever your property or your person, as an American citizen, is outraged or wronged, if the local authority where the outrage is committed is incompetent or unable or unwilling to protect you, you may have the right to appeal to the Federal Courts, and bring your aggressors before Federal Judges, and try them before Federal juries, summoned by Federal marshals. That is the whole of it. But the cry comes up that if you do that you are destroying the Democratic doctrine of local self-government.

Thus much by way of introduction, [laughter,] because the garment I have been trying to cut out I propose to fit on the shoulders of Mr. Horace Greeley. When Mr. Greeley was nominated at Cincinnati in May last, he knew, and you knew, and I knew, and we all knew, that that nomination was not worth a sixpence unless it could be followed by the Democratic nomination at Baltimore; and, therefore, Mr. Greeley set his sails and squared his rigging to catch the breeze expected to blow over Baltimore on the 9th of July. When he came to write his letter of acceptance of the Cincinnati nomination, he adjusted it not so much to what that Convention had done as to what the Baltimore Convention might do. He catered to the taste of the Democratic Party, and more than that, to the worst wing of that party. In the third paragraph of Mr. Greeley's letter of acceptance I charge that he agreed—more than that, he offered in advance to sacrifice the Fourteenth Amendment and the legislation under it. The Democrats would give him that nomination. Mr. Greeley understood, and it was understood everywhere, that in the campaign of 1872 the Southern wing of that party were to be given the lead. They had made the boast that if they could

THE REGISTRATION.

Interesting Narrative of Commissioner Davenport's Work.

How the Records Were Arranged—The Census Tables Brought Into Requisition—An Efficient Reply to Libelers.

The registration of voters closed on Saturday evening, and, almost simultaneously, there was brought to a substantial completion an unprecedented and gigantic work, intended to prevent and detect frauds upon the ballot-box. This work has been going on for months with a quiet system and energy which reflect the greatest credit upon its author, Mr. Davenport, the Chief Supervisor of Elections. It has been prosecuted unknown to the public, having only been brought to general notice through one of its closing acts, the verification of the Registry. In order that we may give some idea of the completeness and thoroughness of this work, we propose to describe briefly what has been done; but, before going into details, we desire to call attention to the fact that the results of the work will be useful not only this year, but for years to come. The boundaries of election districts may be changed, the mode of registration may be altered, but it will take but a few hours to accommodate the results already obtained to any changed system.

The work was commenced some months since by drawing off from the United States census of 1870 the names of all males over eleven years of age. These names were arranged under the numbers of the houses in which they reside, and all the residents on each single block were brought into a book by themselves, thus requiring about 2,500 books. But besides this, the names of all males over eleven years of age were also arranged in forty-two huge volumes, alphabetically, so that if the name of any man is given, the place of his residence at the time the census of 1870 was taken can be at once ascertained. If he removes and subsequently registers and votes elsewhere in this City, his migrations can be traced and noted on the same books. In both of these records—the block books and the general books—there appear all the details as to age, nativity, naturalization, &c., which the census furnishes. Having thus got the basis of information, the names on the census have been checked by the official records of the Board of Health, showing the deaths since the census was taken, and by the records of convictions of crime and of pardons, found in the office of the Secretary of State. The books made up from the census show about 350,000 names, of which about 20,000 are disposed of by the deaths and convictions. Even if we were to stop here the magnitude of the work would be something appalling. Three hundred and fifty thousand names, with all their personal details, have been arranged, first under the houses in which they reside and those brought into separate books by blocks, and, secondly, the same names have also been arranged alphabetically in the same manner that the Directory gives them; but while the Directory contains only 211,244 names, Mr. Davenport's record contains 350,000 names. Besides this Mr. Davenport has procured maps showing the nature of the buildings upon every lot in this City, and these maps are regularly corrected every thirty days. There can, therefore, be no more registering from vacant lots, churches or unoccupied buildings as has been frequent hitherto.

Having thus brought the census into a shape to make it useful, the same thing was done with the names of the pesons registered in 1871, in number 153,592. These names, which were registered alphabetically in each election district, were patiently tranferred so as to be arranged under street numbers, and the names were then compared with those on the census of 1870, and the changes noted. The registration of 1872, being by street numbers, the comparison of that with the census of 1870 and the registry of 1871 has been a less difficult work, though a double comparison of 150,000 separate names is by no means an easy matter. This comparison has brought out one very striking and wholly unexpected result, and that is, that at least two-thirds of the voters who have registered this year registered from the same houses in 1871, and were found in the same houses by the census-takers in 1870. This is true in the poorer as well as in the richer portions of the City, and shows a most unexpected permanency in our proverbially nomadic population. But not only have the census of 1870 and the registration of 1871 and 1872 been thus carefully compared, but after the first two days of registration were over this year, and when more than two-thirds of the names had been registered, what became in a great measure a census of all the males of mature years was taken by inquiry from house to house. This was, with the exception of a single Assembly District which was that canvassed at the close of week before last, all done in five days of last week. It was in this way ascertained by direct inquiry at every house in the City whether persons who had registered really lived at the places stated by them. In order to avoid going over the same ground a second time to verify the registration, with its consequennt double annoyance to householders, the Supervisors were directed to ask for the names of all males living in each house, whether registered or not, but not to insist upon information as to any but those actually registered. This process of verifying the registry is expressly authorized, not only by the National, but by the State law, and the Supervisors were provided with authorizations under both laws. As a general thing, the citizens have given the desired information with entire readiness. The only resistance came from a dozen local politicians scattered about the City, and the speedy manner in which these men were made to feel that the law was to be enforced, in spite of political influence, the abuse of needy and ignorant lawyers, and the misrepresentations of reporters soon put an end to all opposition. "Davenport's census," as the reporters are fond of calling it, was completed Saturday night, and contains the name of every male in the City of mature years.

The way in which practical use is to be made of all the information thus obtained, is as follows: If a man is found in the census of 1870, the registrations of 1871 and 1872 and the census of 1872, it is fair to presume that so far as residence is concerned, he is a voter, and that no further inquiry need be made as to him. The same is true to those who are found on the census of 1870 and the registration of this year, but as to those who appear for the first time both on the registration and census of this year, though presumptively right, a further inquiry at the alleged place of residence is made. If, however, a man who is registered this year cannot be found by inquiry to reside at the place given by him, or is then found for any cause not to be a voter, a warrant is to be issued by the United States Commissioner, upon the proper affidavits, for his arrest, and the warrant will be in the hands of the Supervisor at the poll, to be served by the Marshal when he applies to vote. It is estimated that about 5,000 such names are on the registry. It is intended to publish a list of a considerable portion of these before election day.

But besides this work, considerable subsidiary work has been done. In eight large books are arranged, by street numbers, the number of persons who registered from each in 1871, and also the number who registered in 1872. Wherever any considerable increase appears means are taken to find out whether it is legitimate. In other books the entire registration of this year is arranged, with all the details. These books furnish the means of detecting those who have registered under the same name in different districts. It also brings to light the fact that the same naturalization papers have been used twice or more, either by the same or different persons. In either case the persons will be arrested on applying to vote. Special means have also been taken to detect the fraudulent naturalization papers issued in 1868. These papers were, it will be remembered, issued by the thousands to persons who not only had no right to them, but who never applied for them, and have been kept by the dozens by Democratic politicians. A very large number of these have been detected as fraudulent, and the persons who registered on them will be arrested when they apply to vote, or before, if they can be found. It is possible that the special measures adopted with reference to the fraudulent papers of 1868 may, in some cases, cause annoyance to the few honest citizens who possess papers of that year, but the greatest care is being taken to prevent this. No one who has a fraudulent paper of that year need hope to slip by undetected.

All the work we have described is completed, except a small portion of that connected with the registration of last Friday and Saturday, and that will be completed today, at latest; so that with a week to spare, there will be no hurry or confusion at the last moment. It was with a general knowledge of what was being done, that we confidently asserted, two or three weeks ago, that there would be substantially no fraudulent voting in the City this year. We think those who have carefully read this article, will fully agree with us. The registration is already about 21,000 less than that of 1868, when the Democrats only carried the State by 10,000 majority. We repeat we shall have an honest election this year, for the first time in years, and our citizens will owe that to the unequaled ability, energy, and industry of John I. Davenport. With a knowledge of this fact, they will know how to appreciate the interested abuse which has been showered upon him for a few weeks past. The cry that the "rights of the citizens" have been invaded, simply meant that Tammany repeaters were being shorn of their power, and that Greeley politicians who did not want an honest election, were refusing to obey a law made and carried out to preserve the purity of the ballot-box.

DUTIES ON FRENCH COMMERCE.

A Proclamation by the President—Discriminating Duties to be Levied on Merchandise Imported in French Vessels.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 30.—The following proclamation was issued today:

By the President of the United States of America:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, Upon information received by me from His Majesty the Emperor of the French that discriminating duties before the date of said information, levied in French ports upon merchandise imported from the countries of its origin in vessels of the United States, were discontinued and abolished, and in pursuance of the provisions of an act of Congress of the 7th of January, 1824, and of an act in addition thereto of the 24th of May, 1828, I did on the 12th day of June, 1869, issue my proclamation, declaring that the discriminating duties before that date levied upon merchandise imported from the countries of its origin into ports of the United States, in French vessels, were thereby discontinued and abolished; and, whereas, upon information subsequently received by me that the levying of such duties on all merchandise imported into France in vessels of the United States, whether from the country of its origin or from other countries, had been discontinued, I did, on the 20th of November, 1869, in pursuance of the provisions of the acts of Congress, and by the authority in me vested, thereby issue my proclamation, declaring that the discriminating duties before that date levied on merchandise imported into the United States in French vessels, either from the countries of its origin or from other countries, were thereby discontinued and abolished; and whereas, by the provisions of the said acts of Congress of Jan. 7, 1824, and of the 24th of May, 1828, as well as by the terms of said proclamations of the 12th of June, 1869, and of the 20th of November, 1869, the said suspension of discriminating duties upon merchandise imported into the United States in French vessels was granted by the United States on condition that, and to continue so long as, merchandise imported into France in vessels of the United States should be admitted into the ports of France on the terms of exemption from payment of such discriminating duties; and whereas, information has been received by me that by a law of the French Republic passed on the 30th of January, 1872, and published on the 3d of February, 1872, merchandise imported into France in vessels of the United States from countries other than the United States, with the exception of certain articles enumerated in said law, subjected to discriminating duties; and whereas, by the operation of said law of the French Republic of the 30th of January, 1872, the exemption of French vessels and their cargoes granted by the terms of the said proclamation of the 12th of January, 1869, and of the 20th of November, 1869, in accordance with the provisions of the acts of Congress aforesaid has ceased to be reciprocal on the part of France toward vessels owned by citizens of the United States, and their cargoes. Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by an act of Congress of the 7th day of January, 1824, and by an act additional thereto of the 24th day of May, 1828, do hereby declare and proclaim that on and after this date the said suspension of the collection of discriminating duties upon merchandise imported into the States in French vessels, from countries other than France provided for by my said proclamation of the 12th day of June, 1869, and the 20th day of November, 1869, shall cease and determine, and all the provisions of the acts imposing discriminating foreign tonnage and import duties in the United States, are hereby revived, and shall henceforth be and remain in full force as relates to goods and merchandise imported into the United States, in French vessels from countries other than France, so long as any discriminating duties shall continue to be imposed by France upon goods and merchandise imported into France by vessels of the United States from countries other than the United States.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the City of Washington this 30th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1872, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh. U. S. GRANT.

By the President:
HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State.

Letter of Sumner, Declining the Nomination for Governor of Massachusetts.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 30.—Charles Sumner, in a letter from Paris declining the coalition nomination for Governor of Massachusetts, says: "In acknowledging your communication I beg to repeat this declination, most sincerely desiring that no person should vote for me. Beyond this personal wish, which I trust will not be disregarded, is the consideration that, if chosen, I could not serve. At the same time I express my grateful sense of the trust reposed in me by the Conventions which united in this nomination. My acknowledgments are especially due to the Conventions representing fellow-citizens to whom I have for a long time been opposed on important public questions. I beg them to believe that I am not insensible to their good will, which is enhanced by the sign it affords that past differences are absorbed in a common desire to secure for our country the incomparable blessing, peace and reconciliation under the safeguards of good government and with the principles of the Declaration of Independence as our rule of conduct.

THE RING INDICTMENTS.

Arrest of Ingersoll and Farrington—The Case of William M. Tweed—Alderman Coman Not Indicted.

James H. Ingersoll and John D. Farrington, Jr., were arrested yesterday, on indictments of forgery in the third degree, found by the Grand Jury of Over and Terminer last week. As in the case of the two Aldermen yesterday, Ingersoll and Farrington presented themselves at the Sheriff's office at an early hour, where a formal arrest was made, and with the Sheriff and their counsel they proceeded to the Court of Over and Terminer. Judge Brady fixed the amount of bail at $5,000 each. The counsel for Ingersoll protested against the amount of bail, and suggested to the Judge that $5,000 was too much, who in reply, after glancing a second time at the indictment, observed that "he certainly did not think so." The indicted parties then retired to the District-Attorney's office, where the bonds were made out, Mr. Joseph Sheider furnishing the bail in both cases.

The indictment upon which the warrant for the arrest of both men was issued sets forth that Ingersoll and Farrington, on the 30th of December, 1870, had in their possession a certain warrant for the payment of money, of which the subjoined is a copy:

The County Treasurer of New-York at the National Broadway Bank.

NEW-YORK, Dec. 30, 1870.

Pay to Heath & Smith, or order, fifteen thousand one hundred and thirty-eight dollars, for mason-work in the new Court-house from Oct. 14, 1869, to December, 1870.

RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, Controller.
A. OAKEY HALL, Mayor.
J. B. YOUNG, Clerk of Board of Supervisors.

The indictment then presents that Ingersoll and Farrington did feloniously forge and counterfeit the indorsement of Messrs. Heath & Smith upon the back of the above warrant, which offense by law is constituted forgery in the third degree.

These last two arrests complete the work of the Sheriff in the "Ring" business, no more bench warrants being in his hands, nor are any more expected.

The statement that the Grand Jury had presented an indictment against Mr. Thomas Coman has been proved incorrect. Such, however, was the rumor round the Sheriff's office, and it came from generally reliable sources.

The case of William M. Tweed was suddenly brought up in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday morning. Immediately before the opening of the Court, Tweed, accompanied by his counsel, Messrs. John Graham and Bartlett, entered the ante-room of the Court. Mr. Graham held a consultation with the District-Attorney, and learned from that gentleman that Tweed would not be required that day. It was ultimately decided that Tweed's case should come up immediately upon the close of the Hall trial, so that this cause célèbre may be looked for today, or, at the latest, to-morrow. It is understood that the first proceeding will be the hearing of an argument from Mr. Graham for the quashing of the last indictments against his client.

The Gas Question—The Citizens of Harlem Visit the Controller.

A committee composed of prominent citizens of Harlem, and representing a Tax-payers' Association of the Twelfth Ward, called upon Controller Green, at his office, yesterday, to protest against the payment of bills for gas supplied in their district, on account of its inferior quality and exorbitant prices. Mr. Ebenezer H. Brown, who spoke on behalf of the delegation, also called the attention of the Controller to the number of lamps in Harlem and vicinity used by private parties but furnished with gas at the expense of the City. The citizens should not be required to pay for the gas consumed in this way, and the lamps ought to be immediately removed. The streets were so wretchedly lighted that an ordinary oil lamp would furnish more light; and instead of 5 feet of gas being burned per hour by each lamp, as claimed by the Gas Companies, no more than two feet were actually consumed, as the defective illumination clearly proved.

The Controller said in reply that the unpaid claims of the gas companies for last year found in his office amounted to nearly a million of dollars, and, of course, their examination required time and care. The result was satisfactory in accuracy and knowledge gained. The street-lamps had been counted from the Battery to Harlem, and their exact number ascertained. The consumption charged on the average $33 per lamp per year; but supplied the same amount of gas to the private consumer for about $38 per year. It was generally believed that the prices charged to private individuals were high, and yet the City paid largely in excess of these high rates for gas for public use. He thought that the City, which is a larger consumer, should not be asked to pay more than a private person, who uses but little gas in his house. In business transactions, a large reduction would be made on the bills of a dealer who purchases great quantities of goods, and there was every reason why the City should pay less than the private citizen, instead of being asked to pay more.

Increase in Price of Coal—Heavy Sales Yesterday—The Quotations.

The regular monthly sale of Scranton coal took place, yesterday, at the Company's sales-room, No. 26 Exchange-place. Messrs. John H. Draper & Co. were the auctioneers. There was a large attendance, and, under spirited bidding, 75,000 tons were rapidly disposed of. Steam-boat and grate coal sold at a slight reduction upon last month's prices. Egg, stove and chestnut commanded an advance. Lump held the last month's rate. It first sold for $3 65, and the balance was knocked down at $3 67½. Steam-boat first sold at 4 12½, and declined to $3 82½. Grate rose from $3 90 to $3 92½, when the balance was knocked down. Egg all sold at $4 15. Sales of stove coal were made at $4 62½ and $4 70, and at intermediate prices. Chestnut sold first at $3 72½, rose to $3 85, after which it declined to $3 80.

The following table shows the prices obtained at the last and present sale:

	Tons.	September.	October.
Lump	5,000	$3 65 @3 67½	$3 65 @3 67½
Steam-boat	7,500	4 00 @ 4 27½	3 82½@ 4 12½
Grate	17,500	3 82½@ 4 30	3 90 @ 3 92½
Egg	10,000	4 00 @ 4 10	.... @ 4 15
Stove	20,000	4 27½@ 4 35	4 62½@ 4 70
Chestnut	15,000	3 70 @ 3 72½	3 72½@ 3 80
Total	75,000

The average rise on grate was 15 cents, egg 10 cents, stove 35 cents, and chestnut 5 cents. Steam-boat declined 16¼ cents, and lump remained steady at October's quotations.

Mysterious Disappearance of an Emigrant.

There is considerable interest felt by the Castle Garden officials in the fate of one of the emigrants who arrived in this City recently on her way to the West. The facts of the case are as follows: Maria Weingarn and her daughter Matilda arrived in New-York on the 21st inst., from Stockholm, Sweden, on their way to Omaha. They bought through tickets, which were to be exchanged by a clerk in Castle Garden, upon arrival, for others issued by the railroad companies to Omaha. By some mistake on the part of the clerk only one ticket was given in exchange for the two tickets, and the woman and her daughter left Castle Garden on the 24th inst. for Omaha, by the New-York Central Railroad. When the train arrived at Poughkeepsie, the conductor, being tendered only one ticket, refused to give both of the emigrants passage, and the daughter was obliged to leave the train. Her mother, however, continued on her journey, and, it is understood, has arrived at her destination in Omaha. Since the girl left the train nothing has been seen or heard of her, so far as is known to by the Castle Garden officials, although they are making every exertion to discover her whereabouts. The matter has been referred to the Commissioners of Emigration, who now have it under investigation.

Seizure of Diamonds.

The purser of the steamer Egypt, which recently arrived in this port, had a small box containing a number of unset diamonds, consigned to his care by parties on the other side, which he was directed to deliver to the Adams Express Company, to be forwarded to their destination. The package did not appear on the steamer's manifest. He delivered the box to a wharfinger upon arrival, and the latter kept it in his pocket until a day or two before the steamer sailed, when he attempted to deposit it in a general-order store. O. M. Clanharty, Customs officer, being informed of the circumstances, deemed the diamonds legitimate objects of seizure, and acted accordingly. The diamonds, valued at $2,000, were yesterday taken to the seizure-room of the New-York Custom-house.

A Sad Accident in Brooklyn.

On Tuesday afternoon, Florence, a three-year-old daughter of Dr. Corey, residing at No. 141 Carlton-avenue, fell from the third-story window of her home, to the area below. The body was taken up almost lifeless, and Mr. Cushing, the child's grandfather, started off at once after a physician. On returning he was informed Florence was dead. Upon hearing this announcement, Mr. Cushing fell to the floor and expired almost instantly. Coroner Jones held an inquest yesterday on both of the bodies, and a verdict was rendered in accordance with the above facts.

THE DISEASED HORSES.

A Satisfactory Improvement Among the City Animals.

Increased Activity in all Branches of Trade.

The Street-Railroads Still Holding Off Their Cars—The Number of Dead Horses—The Disease in this Vicinity.

A very general improvement in the condition of the horses affected by the epidemic was noticeable yesterday, and there can be no doubt that the crisis has passed, and with ordinary care, recovery will be the result in a vast majority of cases. The streets of the City wore a more lively and business-like aspect than on any of the preceding four days. The number of vehicles employed in trade had considerably increased, and the coaches and stages were reinforced to a marked extent. The street cars alone showed no sign of improvement, except toward evening, when, for a short time, the west side lines doubled their running force. An increased activity was noticeable along the docks and in the lower business thoroughfares. West, South, and Church streets being alive with traffic on a scale nearly double that of Tuesday. In these localities teams of oxen were frequently to be seen, and those employing them declare their new aids to be but little less serviceable than the horses. In the up-town localities a change was also noticeable, many of the ice, coal, and ash-carts, which had partly disappeared from the streets, having resumed their rounds. The railroads and livery-stables brought out their horses in large numbers for exercise, their improved condition being very satisfactory to the anxious superintendents and owners. The livery-stables, or a majority of them, resumed business to some extent, carriages being furnished in limited numbers for weddings, funerals, and "emergencies," at satisfactory prices. As usual, the scramble for places on the street-cars was immense in the afternoon, and the vehicles were loaded to their utmost capacity. The additional stages did not appear to obviate the crush in any degree, and the hackmen continued demanding fabulous rates.

The owners of horses affected now take a much more hopeful view of the prospects, and say that while a large number of animals will undoubtedly die, the proportion will not be by any means so great as that usual with epidemics. The only fear lies in too early a return to work, as the disease leaves the animal in a very feeble condition, and it is the opinion of many competent authorities that it is actually less dangerous to work the horses while suffering from the affection than immediately after the disappearance of the epidemic. Business men, as a rule, are of the opinion that with oxen and hand carts in sufficiency there would be no need to bring out the horses before they have fully recovered both health and strength.

But while the prospects are unquestionably more favorable now that at any previous time since the appearance of the epidemic, it must not be supposed that the trouble is by any means over, or that there is no likelihood of further mortality among the horses affected. For a considerable number of the latter there is no hope of recovery and it is extremely probable that the number of fatal cases will not be less during the rest of the week than in the past few days. The improvement reported is, of course, not without exception, and applies only to the majority of cases. In local travel, no additional facilities can be expected for the immediate present, as the companies yet running their cars have resolved to work as little as possible, while those which have withdrawn will not, as a rule, resume until their horses have recovered, which cannot be expected for some days to come.

THE CAR-LINES.

Yesterday one-fourth of the usual number of cars ran on the Third-avenue line. The intention of the Company was to have continued to run half the cars until the disease had somewhat abated. Mr. Bergh interfered with this arrangement on the ground that it would necessitate the working of horses as much affected by the disease as to unfit them for the road. All the cars running yesterday had double-teams, in accordance with an arrangement entered into with Mr. Bergh. No change in the number of cars to be run will be made on this road during the coming week, unless an improvement of a marked character takes place among the horses. The Company are willing and anxious to put on a good many more cars, but the President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is inexorable. Two deaths from the disease occurred in the stables yesterday. The horses generally are feeding better and coughing less.

At the Second-avenue stables a slight improvement is visible among the horses, although the work of keeping them in condition is made very difficult by reason of the heavy loading on the cars. The Company continued yesterday to run fifty trips short. The horses are improving. No deaths have occurred at this stable since the breaking out of the epidemic. The same number of cars will be on the road today if no change for the worse takes place among the horses. Mr. Bergh went through the Company's stables on Tuesday evening, but expressed no opinion as to the condition of the horses. He has not up to the present interfered with any of the Company's arrangements.

At the Fourth-avenue car stables the horses are very much better. Yesterday the Company, as on the other days of the week, ran ten cars; today the number will be increased to twelve. Only one death has occurred at this stable since the first coming of the disease.

The Sixth-avenue road showed a decided improvement yesterday, half the usual number of cars being run on both the Vesey and Canal street lines, or forty altogether. No further deaths have occurred here, and the condition of the horses in hospital had very slightly improved.

The Broadway and Seventh-avenue line continued the same as on Tuesday, with the exception of a slight lessening in the number of cars run. In the afternoon eleven of the Broome-street cars were run out, and made two trips each. The hospital here contains five desperate cases.

On Eighth-avenue half the usual number of cars were run on both the Canal and Vesey-street lines. The condition of the horses had improved.

Ninth-avenue will resume today with ten, or half the full complement of cars. The horses here are reported better.

The Belt line has not yet resumed the road, and will not do so before Saturday at least. A horse died here yesterday, making the second fatal case.

The Grand and Forty-second-street line continues to run on half time. The horses are reported better.

Mr. Bergh yesterday notified the Bleecker-street and Fulton Ferry Railroad Company that their horses were in a bad condition, and that they must be withdrawn. Mr. Conover, the Superintendent, was absent at the time the notice was sent, and action by Mr. Bergh was suspended until today. If the Superintendent fails to answer Mr. Bergh's letter, the latter will stop travel on the line.

THE STAGE LINES.

The Fourth-avenue Stage Company increased their number of stages to forty yesterday, and today will probably make a further addition. A much greater increase is warranted, in the opinion of the foreman of the stable, by the very much improved condition of the live stock. With one or two exceptions, the horses are past all danger. One death occurred last night. At the Madison and Fourth-avenue Stage Company's stables the news is cheering. The horses are feeding better and very much improved. The Company had on the road yesterday forty-nine stages, or three more than the day before. If the horses continue to improve, a few more stages will be placed on the road today. Four deaths have occurred at this stable since the epidemic arrived.

The Fifth-avenue and Broadway Stage Company had forty stages on the road yesterday, being an increase of two from the day before. Today the number will probably be increased. In this stable there are one or two bad cases, but the horses generally are improving.

The Broadway and Fourteenth-street Stage Company were obliged to withdraw six stages from the line yesterday. On Tuesday Mr. Bergh interfered somewhat with their running of stages. The horses generally are improving, but are yet very weak. No change in the number of stages run will be made today.

The Twenty-third-street line yesterday added twelve stages to the number—thirty—already on the road, making forty-two running of the sixty-two usually employed.

IMPROVEMENT IN TRADE PROSPECTS.

The consternation that had existed on Monday among the mercantile community, in consequence of the difficulty of obtaining transportation, was greatly abated yesterday, as the majority of the carmen appeared willing to work, although in many cases at advanced rates. Most of the horses had their heads and throats bound up, but as the animals exhibited spirit for work, their owners did not feel willing to let them remain in the stables. The natural consequence was that merchants who had goods to remove to ships, &c., and those who desired to get freight from the piers, found, yesterday, fair means for securing transportation, while the express companies were unable to deliver and receive their regular amount of freights. In some cases, business-houses that kept their own horses showed a desire not to expose the animals too soon; and one large soap-maker took off all his hands from the works, and employed them to convey the boxes to the steamers, a distance of only a few blocks, rather than work the horses. The men seemed to enjoy the fun.

The appearance of all the steam-boat and ship piers yesterday was far better than on any preceding day this week. The immense quantity of all kinds of freight that had accumulated on the piers had disappeared, and even the huge piles of cotton had greatly diminished, notwithstanding the fact that other vessels had arrived in the meantime. At the Charleston, Savannah, New-Orleans, Boston, and Troy steam-boat piers, business had resumed its wonted appearance, and teams were constantly arriving with outward-bound freight, including the heavier kind of merchandise. The merchants had to pay advanced rates, but not near the amounts charged on Monday and Tuesday. At the railroad and foreign steam-ship piers along the North River business had again become brisk, and one of the receiving clerks remarked that "from present appearances no one would suppose that there was any horse disease in the City."

In the markets the spirit of the wholesale dealers had greatly revived. The early morning trade had resumed its wonted aspect, and the stagnation of the preceding days had almost been forgotten, except when a high demand was made for carting. This, the dealers believed, would soon regulate itself, as cartmen were again looking for employment instead of employers seeking cartmen. The grocers' and butchers' wagons had again made their usual appearance in the markets, and the trade incident thereon had therefore increased. The fish-dealers no longer feared for their stock, but all agreed that it would teach them the value of horseflesh.

At the ferries the gate-men said the travel of teams had greatly increased, but had not resumed its regular proportions, doubtless owing to the fact that more horses were engaged in carting about the City, without seeking for jobs crossing the river. Coal-teams were also again at work, so that in a few days the price of delivered coal will be about the same as before the appearance of the disease.

THE FREIGHT DEPOTS.

The freight depots of the various railroads are crowded with bales, boxes, casks, and packages of every description, the consignees having no means of removing them. At the Hudson River Depot, in Hudson-street, and the depot of the Harlem Road, in Centre-street, packages of country produce are piled up to immense quantities, and the freight agents are of opinion that a few days more of such delay would necessitate a suspension of the heavier freightage of the companies.

The Mortality Among the Horses.

The Police yesterday reported dead horses at the following stables in this City:

Ten horses at the Third-avenue Railroad stables, one at the Second-avenue Railroad stables, one at the railroad stables No. 498 Third-avenue, at No. 424 West Thirteenth-street, No. 10 Ninth-avenue, No. 31 Gansevoort-street, No. 78 Bank-street, foot of West Twelfth-street, No. 25 Bethune-street. No. 819 Washington-street, at a stable on the Fort Washington Depot road, south side of One Hundred and Twenty-fourth-street, near Eighth-avenue, north-west corner of One Hundred and Eighty-second-street and Kingsbridge road, No. 48 East Fourth-street, No. 341 Sixth-street, No. 212 Sixth-street, No. 516 East Twelfth-street, No. 535 East Eleventh-street, No. 202 First-avenue, No. 29 Second-avenue, No. 49 Baxter-street, No. 13 Harrison-street, No. 421 West Seventeenth-street, No. 561 West Twenty-third-street, corner of Twenty-second-street and Eleventh-avenue; Eleventh-avenue, between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets; No. 332 West Twenty-first-street, No. 324 West Twenty-second-street, No. 327 West Thirty-seventh-street, No. 507 West Thirty-seventh-street, No. 510 West Forty-eighth-street, No. 566 Seventh-avenue, No. 410 West Thirty-eighth-street, No. 459 West Thirty-first-street, No. 132 West Eighteenth-street, No. 26 East Seventeenth-street, No. 423 Cherry-street, No. 169 Delancey-street, No. 294 Bleecker-street, No. 234 William-street, No. 40 Oliver-street, No. 229 Elizabeth-street, No. 327 East Thirty-eighth-street, No. 342 East Twenty-eighth-street, No. 153 East Thirty-fifth-street, No. 225 East Thirty-eighth-street, No. 53 Ludlow-street, No. 233 East Eighteenth-street, One Hundredth-street and Madison-avenue, Nos. 139, 96 and 26 Thompson street; One Hundredth-street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues; No. 712 East Eleventh-street, No. 221 Lewes-street, No. 346 Third-street, No. 61 East Eleventh-street, No. 90 Sheriff-street, No. 344 Third-street, No. 71 Spring-street, No. 73 Washington-street, No. 592 Washington-street, Sixteenth-street and Avenue B, No. 314 East Twenty-fifth-street, No. 204 East Twenty-fourth street, No. 203 East Twenty-third-street, No. 233 East Twenty-second-street, No. 144 East Twenty-fourth-street, No. 209 East Twenty-third-street, and No. 388 Fourth-avenue.

The Distemper in Brooklyn.

Notwithstanding the reported improvement among the horses in Brooklyn yesterday, it is difficult to determine exactly what is the true state of the epidemic. With a few exceptions truckmen, particularly those whose animals stand quiet during a great portion of the day awaiting jobs, give an encouraging statement. They say the improvement in the condition of their animals is very decided. The agent at Dodd's Express office reported their horses not improving. The business of the office is almost totally suspended. No calls have been received for several days, and the Company's horses are not brought out of the stables, except one or two occasionally for a couple of hours of moderate work, under the belief that a little exercise is beneficial. Fifteen horses were reported at the Police Central Office yesterday as having died in different parts of the city. A cow, a goat, a pig and a dog have also been reported within the past two days as having died from a disease resembling in all its symptoms that which afflicts the horses. Several instances have occurred in which men having the care of diseased horses have themselves become affected, and this fact leads some of the doctors to believe that the distemper may be imparted to other animals, and even to men. Three persons in one family in East New-York are suffering with the complaint, which their physicians do not hesitate to say they contracted from their distempered horses.

The railroad lines as yet exhibit no practical results of any improvement. A conductor on one of the Greenpoint cars stated that the horses of that Company were as bad as they had been at any time, and that not one was fit to be out of the stables. A total suspension of business on all the car lines for a few days is talked of, in order to give the animals the rest which is essential to their speedy recovery. In view of the disabled condition of the horses of the street-cleaning contractors, the Board of City Works request persons not to place their ash-barrels on the sidewalks, as their contents cannot be removed.

The Disease Increasing in New-Jersey.

The epidemic is making terrible strides in New-Jersey. There were seven deaths yesterday in Jersey City. Almost the entire business of the city is utterly stagnated, and such as is still carried on may soon cease.

The alarm occasioned by this state of facts is increased ten-fold by the known fact that nearly all of the horses belonging to the Fire Department are incapable of performing duty. The apprehensions that are necessarily entertained by the citizens, that a great conflagration would destroy the City, are very great, as in the event of a fire it would be found impossible to use the steamers. An additional cause for alarm is, that the horses that have died of the distemper are allowed to remain where they fell, thereby increasing the spread of the infection.

The railway lines are great sufferers by the disease. The greater number of the horses used on the roads are totally incapacitated for use.

Adams Express Company have not been able to attend to their business for two days for the same general reason. No one is capable of judging from the results where the end may be.

The Epidemic in Long Island.

In Long Island City there is hardly a well horse. Every one in the livery stables is sick, and nearly all those belonging to the large manufacturing companies. The ice-carts and bakers' wagons have stopped running. The Astoria and Hunter's Point Railroad Company are running half the number of cars. In Flushing and Jamaica the same state of affairs exists. Few, if any, horses have yet been cured. Business is at a stand still, and a feeling of general alarm begins to prevail over the entire country.

The Distemper in Westchester.

The horse distemper continues to spread in Westchester County. The scarcity of horses and vehicles in the streets of villages is very perceptible. The trips of the horse-cars on the Harlem Bridge and Fordham Railroad have been almost entirely suspended.

The Disease as It Has Shown Itself in Other Places.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Oct. 30.—Although the weather is pleasant, there is no improvement in the horse epidemic. Over two-thirds of the canal horses are affected with the disease, and considerable difficulty is experienced in moving the boats.

NYACK, N. Y., Oct. 30.—The horse disease has broken out here. There are seventeen sick horses in one public, and several in private stables. Reports from the vicinity show its prevalence throughout this neighborhood. There are several bad cases in Piermont.

BOSTON, Oct. 30.—More horses appear on the streets today than for several days past, but far from enough to meet the demands of trade and travel. The disease is evidently subsiding in this vicinity.

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 30.—The horse malady prevails here to some extent, but so far has appeared only in a mild form.

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 30.—The horse disease is reaching alarming proportions in this city and vicinity. A fatal case occurred here today. Twenty-four out of twenty-six horses in one stable are sick, and hundreds of persons are affected. At Passaic Village, near here, there have been 100 cases, but the malady is breaking up there. At Hackensack, Bergen County, nearly every horse is prostrated. The disease has broken out fifteen miles north of Paterson, as Bloomingdale and Wanaque, in this county.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Oct. 30.—The horse disease is spreading rapidly here. Twenty or thirty canal boats are laid up, and nearly every boat has lost one or two horses. Several hundred horses in the city are affected, and it is thought that in a day or two nearly all will be sick. It is spreading in the country also.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 30.—The horse disease is rapidly abating here and teams are quite plenty in the streets; the cars are running. Hacks are again on the stands.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Oct. 30.—No new cases of horse disease have been announced today. The disease has apparently assumed a milder type, and many of those attacked are already recovering. So far no fatal cases have occurred. Passenger-cars are running as usual, except on one line, which has withdrawn seven cars, on account of thirty horses being in the hospital.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 30.—All the horses were withdrawn this noon from the street railways, nearly all of them becoming weak and spiritless. Some of the stables report that the horses are improving this morning.

JERSEY RAILWAY TROUBLES.

The Lease of the New-Jersey Railways to the Pennsylvania Company—Proceedings to Set Aside the Lease.

Proceedings will be commenced today in the Court of Chancery of New-Jersey to have the lease of the New-Jersey railroads to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company set aside, for non-compliance with law in respect of filing the agreement. The law which makes such a proceeding necessary, is an old one, passed several years ago by the Legislature, and never applied to force a dissolution of agreements between railroad companies until recently. The first case in which it came up was that of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company against the New-Jersey Central Company. These Companies consolidated last Spring, agreeing to declare common dividends and to be under the control of one joint Board. The Companies immediately found subjects for disagreement, and at last the declaration of a quarterly dividend by the New-Jersey Central Company brought the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western party into the Court of Chancery, as plaintiffs, asking for an injunction to restrain the New-Jersey Central Company from declaring a dividend. The result of the proceedings was that Vice-

There is a temperance ticket for State officers in the field in this State. Three amendments to the State Constitution are to be voted upon in Michigan. One relates to the old "railroad aid bonds," issued by towns, cities, and counties, previous to May 27, 1870, payment upon which was stopped by a decision of the Supreme Court declaring the law under which they were issued unconstitutional. The amendment proposes merely to permit the towns, &c., to pay such bonds if they choose so to do, and it provides that the State shall never be taxed to pay them. The second amendment increases the salaries of Circuit Judges to $2,500, and the third provides that the number of such Judges shall be reduced from eighteen to fifteen in 1875, when the increased salary is to be paid. The vote of Michigan, in recent years, has been:

Four amendments to the State Constitution are to be voted on in Minnesota. The first authorizes an increase of the State debt to finish and equip the State charitable institutions. The second exempts stockholders in manufacturing corporations from personal liability, an exception not made in behalf of stockholders in railroad or other companies. The third forbids the Legislature to authorize towns to aid railroads in an excess of ten per cent. of their valuation. The fourth relates to the old railroad aid bonds, and to the lands given by Congress to the State for internal improvements, providing that these lands shall be sold, and the proceeds be invested in United States bonds or Minnesota State bonds issued since 1860, to constitute an internal improvement land fund. The vote of Minnesota in recent years has been:

A Cure for Hydrophobia.

A correspondent of the London Times writes to that journal that there exists in the heart of the Ardennes an obscure and antiquated little village, nestling round a fine old abbey church, dedicated to St. Hubert, whither resort annually the average number of 140 persons from Germany, Tyrol, Switzerland, Belgium, &c., to participate in what they are firmly convinced is an infallible cure for hydrophobia. This belief—justified, our correspondent says, by the result—has existed for eleven centuries, during which time, it is asserted, the remedy has never been known to fail, unless the regulations enjoined have been willfully violated. The place is a few miles off the railroad, and sufficiently picturesque to form an attraction to the pedestrian tourist and artist. Our informant remained there a couple of days, during which he obtained every detail connected with its local characteristic, and, without attempting in any way to explain the circumstance, or to urge it on the belief of any one, he asserts that he was not able to meet with any one, however skeptical, who could be got to deny the efficacy of the remedy. He observes, with reference to the remarks of a Scotch correspondent in the Times as to secret remedies known to natives in India for poisonous bites, that he need not go so far to search for them. There is still in the possession of his family a letter addressed from his grandfather to his relatives in England, dated Paris, where he was residing at the time the First Consul made all the English into hostages. It states that having been bitten by a dog declared to be mad, and consequently destroyed, he was carried to the Hôtel-Dieu, where, after the application of a certain powder, the ingredients of which were known only to the medical staff there, he was completely cured. He offered a large sum to obtain the recipe, but was told it had been discovered by a monk, and given on that hospital on condition that it should never be revealed. His grandfather was a stanch Protestant, and there was neither superstition nor credulity to account for the statement or the cure.

Ingenious Robberies by a French Architect.

The Propagateur de Lille gives some details of two robberies committed under singular circumstances, the perpetrator of them being a man named Lemay, an architect and business agent in that town. In 1870, at the outbreak of the war, he sent his wife to the house of a friend of his, named Baude, a rich landholder at Autrive, and afterward to that of a widow, Mme. Mollet-Baude, an equally wealthy proprietor at Escanaffle, the two localities being situated near Courtray. On July 31, 1871, Lomay conducted to a representation at the American Circus, Place de la République, his wife, accompanied by Mme. Mollet. He had scarcely arrived when he quitted the representation under pretext of indisposition, took the train for Roubaix, where he had engaged a cariage, got into it, drove to Escanaffle, penetrated into the house of Mme. Mollet, and carried off 63,500 francs' worth of railway securities and jewels. The next day, at 5½ o'clock, he was at Lille, in his own house, and behaved to Mme. Mollet as if nothing had happened. In the course of the morning that lady received a telegram informing her that she had been the victim of a robbery. She begged the assistance of Lemay to trace the thief. The latter placed himself at her disposal, and remained at Escanaffle six weeks, of course without discovering the author of the theft. Lemay then decided on the means of committing another. In fact, he made a present of his own watch-dog to M. Baude, assuring him that a mouse could not enter his dwelling without Médor barking. That gentleman was completely reassured; but in the night of Oct. 2, 1871, he was himself the victim of a robbery of 40,000 francs in securities, gold, and silver. It so happened that Lemay had rebuilt the house of M. Baude, so that he knew all the passages in it. Moreover, the dog had not barked, so that here were two indications, and the gentleman who had been despoiled arrived at the supposition that the thief might very well be Lemay himself. He therefore applied to the Police, and the hero of the tale was arrested by the Belgian authorities, and, after active researches, the property stolen from M. Baude and Mme. Mollet was recovered in two hiding-places in Lemay's house. Lemay is now awaiting his trial.

THE PAPACY.

The Life of Pius IX. Drawing to a Close.

Scenes in Rome on the Death of a Pope—How Gregory XVI. Passed Away—The Approaching Pontifical Election.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

ROME, Wednesday, Oct. 2, 1872.

The excitement attendant upon the celebration of the anniversary of the emancipation of Italy had scarcely passed away, when an apparently trivial occurrence caused all the quidnuncs of the Eternal City once more to shake their wise heads, and to run in a great flurry from the Pincian to the Aventine, and from the palace of Antonelli to the Embassy of France. Marvelous rumors spread from the Vatican across the bridge into the densely-populated quarters of the city, making them swarm like troubled bee-hives, and cautious whispers exchanged at the Piazza de Colonna ended in loud exclamations at the Porta del Popolo. What had really happened was only this: Tuesday morning being fine, and promising a warm day, the Pope expressed a wish to take a short walk in the fine garden behind the Vatican; the usual attendants were at once notified, but when they sallied forth they noticed that the Holy Father was a little nervous, his hand, holding the staff on which he is obliged to lean nowadays, trembling visibly, and his eyes, which have sadly changed of late, searching with anxious eagerness all the avenues that opened before him. Nor was it less unusual to see Pius IX. venture forth upon a walk (he had not left the rooms and corridors of the Vatican for months) without being accompanied by the Cardinal Secretary, the faithful and all-powerful Antonelli. But still greater was the astonishment of all who surrounded him, when of a sudden, at a turn in the garden, a noble-looking prelate appeared in sight, who no sooner beheld the Holy Father, than he saluted him, according to the strict ceremonial of former days, but with well-feigned signs of astonishment. A few sentences, uttered with intentional emphasis, spoke of the accidental meeting, the happy chance which had thus brought the Pope and the clerical representative of France, Cardinal Bonnechose, face to face. The rumor spread with that rapidity which characterizes Roman eagerness for news, and ere many minutes had passed, eager priests and anxious laymen were seen hanging around all the entrances and gateways, to catch a glimpse of the French prelate, who had not been seen at the Pope's Court for many a month. And when it gradually became known that the interview had lasted for more than an hour, and that at the leave-taking Pius IX. had spoken most affectionately of the people of France, all Rome was astir, and dispatches were sent off to all parts of the world.

Nor was it mere idle curiosity which thus stirred up the Eternal City, but a deep and solemn feeling that found a ready echo at every court of Europe, in every nation on earth. It is well known at Rome that the days of poor Pius IX. are numbered, and every minister has long since begun to send daily bulletins to his master at home. The bent shoulders, the drooping head, the feeble gait, and above all the failing memory of the good old man, speak but too eloquently of the approach of the day on which he is to be freed of his burden. Nor does he flatter himself—as he used to do till quite recently—any longer with visions of long years of life, of great deeds yet to be done, and of thorough changes to be accomplished. His brother's recent death has made a deep impression upon his mind, and the spirit that once held up and strengthened the decaying frame, is no longer there. He knows his end is coming, and he shares with all his faithful ones the great anxiety to know who is to be his successor on the throne of St. Peter. It is even said that the dread of the last hour is weighing heavily on his mind.

He will not be blamed for this terror by those who know the nature of the last scene which is enacted at the Vatican when a Pope leaves this world. As soon as all hope is given up by the attending physicians—and good care is taken to ascertain the precise moment—all ties of respect or affection are broken in an instant, and the lowest passions are unchained without shame or reserve. Prelates and priests rush away to gather around their patrons, and to worship the rising sun. Officers of the Noble Guard, State officials of every rank, and all the employes of the palace collect in haste their property to secure it against new comers, and carry away many a costly souvenir from the deserted apartments. The very servants, from the Pope's "own man" to the scullion in the kitchen, join the general sauve qui peut, but only after having loaded themselves with all the money, jewels or other valuable things on which they can lay hands. Such was the case in 1846, when Gregory XVI. was abandoned by all his friends and followers. A poor under gardener, who had often received a kind word or a modest gift from the Pope when walking in his garden, heard of his illness, and felt prompted in his heart to see him once more in life. He found the outer door of the palace open; not a person in the halls, on the stairs, in the passages. He knocked at a door, and, as no one answered, opened it; the room was empty; he ventured into a second and third; not a soul was to be seen. At last he enters a dimly-lighted, magnificent apartment, and to his amazement, sees there a bed, on which a huge pile of pillows and bolsters is raised on one end, while the Pope himself lies on one side of it, his head hanging down and looking deep purple. The poor gardener rushes up to his benefactor; with tender, trembling hands he places him on his bed, and then sinks reverently on his knees, asking the Holy Father's blessing. As he receives no answer, he starts up in terror, touches the body and finds it cold! Once more he kneels down, saying a De Profundis for the deceased, and is thus found by a servant, who enters with a pile of garments and gowns on his arm, and threatens him with dire punishment if ever a word escapes him as to what he has seen.

Not even when death has thus taken pity on the abandoned sufferer, is rest at once granted the poor body. The Cardinal Chamberlain, having been officially informed of the death of the Pope, appears with other prelates at the bedside and calls the deceased three times by name; receiving no answer, he takes from a silver salver, offered him by a high official, a silver hammer with ivory handle, and with this instrument knocks three times against the forehead of the deceased. Only then is the Pope officially dead; the Senate of Rome takes formal possession of the palace, the fisher's ring is solemnly broken and the bell set ringing, which is only heard at the death of the Pope, and—the beginning of carnival!

Then begins that most exciting of all scenes which Christendom knows upon earth—the conclave of the Cardinals for the purpose of electing a new Pope. What fearful passions, what subtle intrigues, what cunning devices, those narrow cells have witnessed, in which the electors are held prisoners till the choice has been accomplished! There are the so-called Crown Cardinals, who belong, by race or by family connection, to one of the reigning houses of Europe, and naturally favor the election of one of their own race, or at least of a man pledged to the interests of their country. Among these the German Empire will, after a long interval, appear once more at the approaching conclave, and, like Brennus, throw the victorious sword into the scales. Opposed to these are the Zelanti, who represent the Italian elements desirous of having a native on the Papal throne, who will take good care of friends and followers, and faithfully adhere to the traditions of former Popes.

The approaching election will, no doubt, be one of the most exciting in the annals of the Church. Although the Pope is no longer a secular Prince, he has, in the estimation of many sound thinkers and experienced statesmen, the chance of becoming all the more powerful in his capacity as a purely spiritual master of millions of souls. He will no longer be hampered by political embarrassments, his government will not be open, as heretofore, to strict criticism and loud condemnation on the score of feebleness or partiality; even his finances will be bettered, and his position infinitely higher and safer than it was ever before. But the interest of the Continental Powers lies mainly in having a Pope to deal with in the delicate questions of State and Church, who shall be liberal and enlightened. Germany, and perhaps France, will do all in their power to influence the election in this spirit; Italy and Spain, perhaps, also, some foreign countries, will as eagerly press the choice of a man pledged to continue the policy of Pius IX. While the Emperor of Germany will try to intimidate the Conclave, France will, no doubt, again have a cunning diplomat on hand who may rival his predecessor, and, like him, receive from the witty Roman people the title of "Knight of the Holy Ghost," in sly allusion to the form which declares the Conclave to be under the direct control of the Holy Spirit. The liberal powers of Europe will certainly see to it that the tiara be not placed upon the head of a man like Leo XII., (1823,) who built another wall around the Ghetto, the prison of the Jews, deposed a Roman Magistrate because he had permitted vaccination, and canonized a Spanish monk whose special proof of sanctity consisted in the frequent miracle of stripping half-roasted birds from the spit and ordering them to fly away alive.

Hence it is that all Rome is busy building castles in the air; there is not a man from the highest Monsignore to the humblest menial servant, who has not his favorite candidate for the throne, from whom he hopes preferment or alms. Patriotic Italians again are on the side of those who wish for a truly enlightened head of the Church, energetic enough to fight the great battle of the Church against the State, and yet wise enough not to risk an utter downfall of Papacy. All their speculations, however, may come to naught yet by one of two probabilities. Either a man may be chosen, like Pius IX. himself, whom even the bitter Romans only called the Good, of whom a satirical Cardinal sneeringly said that in his family even the cats were Liberals, and who yet was forced to break every promise and abandon every purpose he had formed when he was chosen. Or the Pope and his advisers may avail themselves of the last resort left in such cases—a secret council may be called together by Pius IX. and a successor may be chosen by them in anticipation of his death. The measure is warranted by dogma and precedent alike, and can only miscarry by the determination of foreign Powers not to acknowledge the choice thus made, because the ancient right of exclusion, which belongs to them, has not been admitted. Even as these lines are written, the rumor is heard in many a palace that such a meeting has taken place, and that Cardinal Panebianco has been chosen.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The Pope has added to the list of Catholic saints the late Queen Maria Christina of Naples, Nicholas von der Flüe, the French priest Jean d'Ars, and Pope Eugenius III.

The Indépendance Belge announces that the tavern-keepers of Brussels have been vanquished by the consumers. Most of the establishments, in which the price of beer had been raised from twelve centimes to fourteen centimes the glass, have now been forced to abandon the augmentation in question in consequence of the former customers remaining away.

The London Daily Telegraph publishes a telegram from Brussels, stating that a man has surrendered himself to the Magistrates of that city, who affirms that he was an accomplice of Troppmann in the murder of the Kinck family. He also declares that he was an officer under the Commune, and had taken part in the shooting of the hostages, among whom were the Archbishop of Paris and the President Bonjean. A medical examination has resulted in the opinion that the person is of sound mind. The event has created a great sensation in Brussels.

The London Echo, of Oct. 16, says: "A sad remnant of the siege of Paris was discovered in the Seine yesterday. Some barges were being towed along at Bercy, when an unshapely mass came to the surface of the river. It was immediately fished on board by two men, and found to be the decomposed remains of a human body, dressed in a diving costume. The dress was riddled in several places, and on being undone, a tin box dropped out, which was discovered to contain dispatches from the Delegation at Tours to the Government at Paris. Another paper in the same box gave the name of the bearer, which was none other than Capt. Louis Legrand, of the Army of the Loire. The unfortunate deceased was a native of Choisy-le-Roi, and, owing to his intimate knowledge of the river in that part of the Prussian investment, had undertaken to get into the besieged capital. He is supposed, by the aid of his diving costume, to have walked along the bed of the river for some distance, but through miscalculation came to the surface too soon and was shot by the Prussian outposts."

The London papers record the death of Mr. Albany Fonblanque, who for many years occupied a prominent position on the newspaper Press. His father was an equity lawyer and Queen's counsel, and he was intended for the same profession, and placed in the office of Mr. Christy, the well-known special pleader. Circumstances, however, turned his attention to literature, and he became a contributor to the Morning Chronicle, under the successive editorships of Perry and Black. He afterward joined the staff of the Examiner weekly newspaper, of which he eventually became the editor and proprietor. In that position he wrote a series of political articles, from the Radical point of view, the best of which were afterward collected by himself and republished in a permanent form under the title of England Under Seven Administrations. Soon after the Whigs came into power, in 1846, Lord John Russell conferred upon him the office of head of the Statistical Department in the Board of Trade, then vacant by the death of Mr. Porter. From that time Mr. Fonblanque withdrew in great measure from his connection with the newspaper Press, and from literary pursuits in general, confining himself to the duties of his department. He died in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "An enterprising member of the French clergy, inspired, no doubt, by the success which has attended the sale of Benedictine, Trappistine, Chartreuse, and other monastical liqueurs, has availed himself of the publicity which recent proceedings have given to the grotto at Lourdes to advertise a new spirit which, taken internally, will be as beneficial to the patient as the waters of the grotto when applied externally. In a prospectus headed 'A Notre Dame de Lourdes,' this liqueur, which he has baptized 'Lourdetelle,' is announced to be made from the water of the miraculous fountain at Lourdes, with an admixture of plants and fruits from the splendid valleys of Luchon, Eaux-Bonnes, Chauterets, &c. It possesses, in addition to an exquisite perfume, qualities which render it a very valuable hygienic. Taken before a meal, it gives an appetite, but, instead of having a brutalizing and lethal effect like absinthe, it opens up the channels of the soul. Taken after food, it perfumes the mouth, accelerates the digestion, and creates a feeling of comfort greater than can be obtained from the best coupae or the most delicious Chartreuse. The most stubborn palate, the most ruined of stomachs, cannot but derive immediate benefit from this incomparable liqueur."

The Channel Passage.

Mr. Henry Bessemer has sent the following letter to the London Times:

"This subject has lately undergone a most thorough and searching investigation, and one of England's most able naval architects, Mr. E. J. Reed, is at this moment busily engaged settling the details of a pair of vessels of the most improved construction, especially adapted to and intended for the Channel service. These plans are nearly ready for the builder, and the specifications for the engines and boilers are completed. It has been felt that however necessary and desirable it may be to increase the size of, and deepen our present harbors, or to construct new ones on the French coast, it is, above all things, desirable to avoid the delay consequent on such extensive works, and to run a pair of powerful steamers (at the earliest date at which it is possible to get them constructed) between the existing harbors, and thus at once to furnish the accommodation so imperatively demanded by the public, and also allow sufficient time for the harbor question to be settled on a sound basis, and the necessary works to be executed at the slow rate at which all such marine engineering unavoidably proceeds, without condemning the public to its present miseries during the time the works are in progress. These steamers are of larger dimensions than the famous Holyhead boats, but will only draw seven feet of water, and will each be propelled by engines of 750 horse-power nominal, equal to 4,600 indicated horse-power, and, consequently, with their small immersed area of midship section, be capable of running with ease at a speed of twenty miles per hour. They will be provided with a spacious saloon of 50 feet in length by 30 feet broad, and with a height of 20 feet, and be thoroughly well lighted and ventilated. At each end of the saloon there will be four private rooms for ladies and the same number for gentlemen, the whole being surmounted by a promenade deck of seventy feet in length, at a height of seven feet above the ordinary deck of the vessel. The whole of these rooms and the raised promenade deck will be so constructed that a 'steersman' can, by means of powerful hydraulic apparatus, govern and sustain the whole structure so completely and quietly that the passengers will not be subjected in the roughest weather to a greater amount of motion than is felt in an ordinary railway carriage; each of the rooms and the promenade deck will be at all times accessible by a broad staircase, free from motion and of most easy ascent, so that passengers may enjoy the fresh sea breeze on the quiet, level promenade deck, or, if the weather is unfavorable, descend to the saloon below. The arrangements for the transfer of luggage to and from the vessel are such as to prevent the possibility of injury to it in any way, while it will save much time in its transshipment; and, generally, I may state that the object kept steadily in view in the design and arrangement of these vessels is the greatest possible comfort and convenience of the passengers, the rapidity of transit, and, above all, the prevention of that dreaded malady, sea-sickness, with all its attendant horrors both to the victims themselves and to their scarcely less fortunate fellow-passengers."

The Marshal in Prison—Outside and Inside Scenes—Prospects of the Trial.

Versailles (Oct. 15) Correspondence of the London Daily Telegraph.

Some Paris newspapers have lately been publishing stories respecting the imprisonment of Marshal Bazaine, which simply prove that the writers have fertile brains for invention. I called upon the distinguished prisoner yesterday, and can testify that nothing has been changed in the surveillance exercised over him, and that his health is very much the same as it was six months ago—save that the wound he received on the 16th of August, 1870, at Vionville, from the fragment of a spent shell, has caused him considerable annoyance. To a man who, for half a century, has led an outdoor life, who for more than thirty years was on active service as a soldier, and who in mind, as well as in body, has never known what it was to pass an idle hour, five months' confinement in a very small house—with the alternative of coming out into a garden some forty yards square, in which there are three sentries to overlook him and can see all he does, as well as hear every word he says—would, in all likelihood, cause something akin to insanity. But Bazaine seems to be made of sterner stuff. He is in very good spirits, and determined, when accused before a Court-martial, to defend himself to the utmost. It is not easy to obtain permission to visit the Marshal. Those who have such permits have—as I had—first to apply to Col. Gaillard, of the Staff Corps, Chef de la Justice Militaire, who submits the name of the applicant to the Marshal himself. If the latter expresses a wish to grant the interview, a pass is given, on which Mr. So-and-so "est autorisé à communiquer avec M. le Maréchal Bazaine"—the permis being duly stamped with the seal of "La 1ère Division Militaire, Service de la Justice," and signed by Col. Gaillard—an officer who will not, I trust, take it amiss if I choose this opportunity of thanking him for his great courtesy and kindness towards me when I sought and obtained leave to visit my old acquaintance, now in his charge as prisoner.

The house in which Marshal Bazaine is confined is a small detached villa at the further end of the Avenue de Picardie, close to the grille, or iron gate, of Versailles, on the road to St. Cloud. It was for many years the domicile of an English gardener named Walter; and the place was afterward rented by Col. Waugh, an Anglo-Indian officer whose name was familiar to newspaper readers some dozen years ago, in connection with the failure of a joint-stock bank in London. The garden and the house are both small—about the size of what can be rented in the outskirts of London for £30 or £35 per annum. The gate of the garden is now of iron, and outside it is a sentry-box, with a soldier of the line on duty. When a visitor approaches the gate, he is told by the sentry not to ring, but to knock; and, this being done, a non-commissioned officer, who has charge of the premises, opens to admit him, inspects the pass, and calls the Marshal's servant, who takes up the visitor's name to his master. Once inside the garden, I began to realize the fact that the premises formed part of what are called in the permit, "La Prison Militaire Annexe." There was a sentry close to the windows on the ground floor; another a little to the right of the house, some fifty paces distant; a third to the left "left front," as a soldier would say, of the drawing-room windows, and a fourth a little further round to the left of the last. No one could, by possibility, move in any part of the small garden without being under the eyes of at least two sentries, nor could any conversation be held in the ground without the soldiers hearing all that was said. About fifteen yards from the house, separated from the rest of the grounds by a thin hedge, are four or five bell tents, in which the guards—a Captain, a subaltern, and fifty men—are quartered. The guards are changed every twenty-four hours. The officer of the guard, as also those who watch around the premises outside, are doubled every night. There is also a subaltern officer under Col. Gaillard's orders, who resides and sleeps on the premises. The Colonel himself does not sleep in the house, but comes once a day to visit the prisoner. Upon various occasions of this show of military prevention was the Marshal's little boy, Achille, a pretty child of some three years old, playing gleefully in the garden when I went in. The rest of Marshal Bazaine's children—he has five, the eldest being only seven years old—are living with their mother in a house situated in the grounds of the convent Notre Dame de Refuge, a short distance from where the Marshal is confined. They come to see him every day with Mme. Bazaine, and remain from 1 P. M. until dark, when everybody is obliged to leave the premises of the "Prison Militaire Annexe," excepting the officials. The Marshal has two Aids-de-camp, both Colonels of the Staff Corps, named Villette and Magnan. These two gentlemen have all along stood by their chief, in evil as well as in good report; and they take it by turns, quaternate weeks, to share his captivity—the one on duty for the time being considered equally a prisoner with his chief.

I found Marshal Bazaine in very good spirits, considering that for five long months he has been confined to the small house and garden he now occupies. He declares that he has nothing whatever to complain of on the part of those who have charge of him, all of them treating him with as much respect as if he were still in command of the Army of the Rhone. He told me that when, not long ago, one of his children was dangerously ill at the house where Mme. Bazaine resides, the Minister of War, unsolicited, sent word that the Marshal might go to see the child, simply accompanied by Col. Gaillard. The danger, however, passed away so quickly that there was no occasion for him to take advantage of the Minister's kindness—a kindness which, as the Marshal says, he believes to have been prompted by M. Thiers. Of the latter he spoke in the highest terms. I asked him whether he did not fear the result of the trial. He replied that, for himself, he did not in the least fear; but that, in defending himself, he would be obliged to show up the incapacity, the want of obedience, the general laziness (mollesse) and want of energy in others, over which it would have been far better to pass a wet sponge. He confirmed what I mentioned in my former letter, that he has never been told upon what charges he is to be tried, of what crime he is deemed guilty, or whether it is of a military or of a political offense that is imputed. I spoke of the assertion from time to time reiterated by the Red Radical press, that more than once he had, while in command at Metz, held interviews with Prince Frederick Charles and other German Generals. He laughed heartily at the idea, and replied: "Now, my dear Sir, do you, who have been a military man—do you believe it possible for an officer commanding a larger army than was assembled in the Crimea to slip in and out of an invested town like a camp-follower who wants to steal a few vegetables? Is not an officer holding such a command always under the eyes of a dozen or more staff officers, aide-de-camp, officers of his escort, and the like? Would it have been possible for me to meet any of the German chiefs without the facts being known to at least five or six officers, and the news afterward getting wind throughout the city of Metz? When has any officer of the immense army I commanded ever hinted at anything of the kind? I held, of course, written intercourse with the Prince; I was obliged to do so in order to settle the terms of the surrender; but I never saw or spoke to one of them until I gave myself up a prisoner. They accuse me of not making more vigorous sorties from Metz at the commencement. Listen." Here the Marshal read me certain dispatches from officers under his orders, which showed plainly that so early as the 19th of August there existed a large amount of that mollesse of which he had spoken, at any rate among some of his immediate subordinates. "No," he continued; "we were, for more reasons than one, utterly unfit for a European warfare, particularly against an army which had a first-rate artillery, and in which every man obeyed his superiors without a word of remonstrance, from the private soldier who did what his corporal told him, up to the divisional General who followed out to the letter what the commander of his corps directed."

A San Francisco Jury's Estimate of the Value of a Life.

From the San Francisco Chronicle, Oct. 17.

In the Fifteenth District Court yesterday, Judge Dwinelle, on motion of counsel for plaintiff, set aside the verdict in the case of G. D. Mariani against George Dougherty. The action was brought to recover damages for the death of Guiseppe Mariani, alleged to have been caused by being struck with a rock, hurled from a blast fired by the defendant while prosecuting his grading operations at North Beach. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $200. The plaintiff thought the sum too small and moved for a new trial. Judge Dwinelle, in granting the motion, said that he considered the verdict a mockery of justice. If the jury had rendered a verdict for the defendant, he would not have felt justified in disturbing it; but he could not comprehend how they could find for the plaintiff and yet say on their oaths that the life of the deceased was not worth more than $200. He thought it was trifling with human life, and he would never sanction such a verdict.

OLD HOUSES.

John Hopper's Homestead, Corner of Broadway and Fiftieth-Street.

Description of a Farm-House of the Last Century—The Houses which John Hopper Built for His Sons.

As New-York was colonized in early times by two distinct nationalities, the seeker after ancient things has a right to expect that he will find some traces of both. Nor will he be disappointed. While the Beekman house presents to the imagination the beau ideal of the bowery, or country-house of the wealthy merchants of Holland, the old Hopper homestead on Broadway and Fiftieth-street represents the farm-houses built by English colonists. It is true that in the early history of New-York all the salient features are Dutch, but it must not be forgotten that from the time of the second occasion a small but steady English immigration set in. There were at that era many political and religious reasons for the preference which English settlers gave to New-England, and more especially did these reasons affect persons of high standing and of liberal education. But there was in spite of this a small stream of colonists directed toward Manhattan Island, even from the days of Sir Edward Andross, the first Governor regularly appointed by the Duke of York. Among these was the ancestor of John Hopper, who, in 1740, built the homestead which is the subject of this article. His farm of 300 acres, held by a grant from Andross, marched to the eastward with the great farm of Dr. Girardus Beekman, and to the westward extended to the Hudson River. He was an exceedingly prosperous man, for while his ancestors had vegetated upon the farm, living half as farmers, half as hunters, the great increase of the City down in the southern part of Manhattan Island had made a market for him and compelled him to be rich and energetic. Providence had blessed him with three sons, and he determined to build for each a stone house, and to accompany the gift with a farm of 100 acres, reserving to himself the ownership of one, which was destined ultimately for his youngest son, Andrew. The house for his eldest son, John, was built upon the bank of the Hudson River, between what are now Fiftieth and Fifty-second streets. The house of Yellis Hopper, his second son, was erected on Fifty-first-street, between Broadway and Eighth-avenue, and the homestead for himself and his youngest son he built where it now stands. To protect it from the masterful west winds which howl across the Hudson in Winter time, in the most unpleasant fashion, he planted a great row of Lombardy poplars, the pitiful skeletons of which stand despairingly on Broadway to this day. The house itself has been tenderly preserved. Andrew Hopper never married during his father's lifetime, but when quite old was united to a young widow, a daughter of a Mr Guest. She became attached to the place, and spared no expense to keep it in order, and to cultivate the garden which surrounded it. At her death she bequeathed it to her brother, from whom it descended to his daughter, Mrs. Heelas, who has sold the place to Mr. Silvern. But as in the present condition of Broadway and Seventh-avenue, building does not promise any great remuneration, he leases the house to Mrs. Heelas, and probably that family may live in it for many years. The traveler voyaging to the Central Park can hardly have failed to have noticed the unfortunate place so tumbled from its high estate. The house, which is in excellent condition, is nearly hidden from view by great, melancholy willows, on the eastern side, facing Seventh-avenue, and on the Broadway side the gloomy, broken, shattered Lombardy poplars form a kind of screen. From Fifty-first-street nothing of the homestead can be seen, because a broad strip of the block has been sold at some time or other by the family, and this has been fenced off with a high wooden structure, the ground so protected being occupied by the remains of old wagons and débris of every description. The front on Fiftieth-street is quite pleasing, and presents a fair specimen of a cozy English farm-house, for which shingles of wood have been used in roofing instead of thatch. But the peculiarity of the thatched house, that is, its easy slope, necessitated by the manner of putting on the materials, has been preserved; and, moreover, in compliment to the American fashion of piazzas, this great sloping roof has been brought forward over the walls so as to form with its eaves the top of the piazza. This novel idea has resulted in giving the house the appearance of being all roof, and it looks pretty much as a boy of five with his father's hat on his tiny head. Located in the roof are two attic windows, with old-fashioned glass panes. The rear is exactly a counterpart of the front. At some time or other an extension was built out toward Seventh-avenue, but this was of brick, with an upper floor of wood.

Entering by the front door on Fiftieth-street, the visitor finds himself in a handsome little hall, built quite square, with the stair-case leading to the attics, which, though low, are quite large rooms, directly in front. To the right is the great room which, in all probability, was the parlor kitchen of the first occupants. For though the fire-place is quite handsome and the chimney-piece is of carved oak, yet the partition-wall between this room and the one in rear is of such enormous size as to warrant the conjecture that the chimney is inclosed in it, and must be of unusual size. The room in rear is of the same length, but has only one-third of the width, which would seem to narrow for the bustling labors of a farm kitchen. When the extension was built out and devoted to culinary pursuits, the great room was trimmed up and a handsome cornice added. The great, yawning fireplace, with its metal supports for the huge logs, was suffered to remain, but Mrs. Andrew Hopper's successor changed it to the more restricted space of modern coal-fires. There is a third room on the ground-floor of the original stone building, which is under the stair-case and is reached by a corridor leading from the hall, arched and carved in the old style. This little room was undoubtedly the store-room, for exactly underneath it is the milk-house, built into the foundation with the largest stones that could be found. It was an awkward place to get into before the change was made in the grading, for one had to bend double before one could enter. There was a kind of rough shelving along which the pans of milk were placed, and the place was so sheltered from the sun that even in the hottest weather the milk was kept sweet and deliciously cool. Amateurs of milk in those days used to descend fearlessly into the place itself, in spite of scaling-backs, to quaff the fluid before it should become warmed by exposure to the outer air. Old people who remember these things say that the system was infinitely better than our modern ice, for the milk tasted better, and was healthier because the constant use of ice numbs the great ganglions in the stomach.

The stone up stairs are large, comfortable rooms, but of the four two only belonged to the original house. Mrs. Andrew Hopper added those in the rear, bringing down the roof in the same way over the piazza that constructed to correspond with the front of the house. That piazza no doubt looked out upon a beautiful garden, but now the scene is the most desolate that can be imagined. Everything has grown according to its fantasy, and the weeds, the children of the soil, have dispossessed their half-brother, the flowers. Here and there may be discerned some hardy flowering plant that still disputes the field, but the general aspect of the place may be summed up as tall, luxuriant weeds, and broken, dingy shrubs. The grass grows long and thick as if it charitably wished to hide the desolation, and waves mournfully in the wind in answer to the moanings of the great willows and the complainings of the unhappy-looking poplars. Fences close about, evidently mistresses of the situation, and run to and fro for worms and seeds through the dragged bushes and over the scanty patches of vegetables. There are old fruit-trees, too, on which there has been no fruit for many years, but on whose trunks are beautiful specimens of lichens and insect mysteries that would warm the heart of an entomologist. A wild-looking, savage cat may often be seen hiding behind some overgrown lilacs, watching for sparrows, which she springs upon and devours with the ferocity of a tigress. No child is ever seen to wander about the place, but occasionally an old, very old servant, with a face seamed with a thousand wrinkles, potters about the cabbage-bed, or goes to the old well. Sometimes, too, an old lady in the Spring time, and the flush Summer, wanders about what was once a garden, and inhales the fragrance of the lilacs.

The house which John Hopper, senior, built for his son Yellis, on Fifty-first-street, between Broadway and Eighth-avenue, has completely passed away, and the site is occupied by a marble-yard. Far other has been the fortune of that which he built for his eldest son, John. That gentleman married, and had a daughter who married James Strycker, of Strycker's Bay, and the homestead was inherited by their son, the well-known Major Gen. Strycker. He died in 1863, after having dwelt there more than fifty years. During this long space of time he enlarged and modernized the house, which was, in general construction, very much like the Hopper homestead. He had inherited with the house a considerable slice of the hundred acres of farm that went with it, and of his share he retained seven acres, reaching from Eleventh-avenue to the river, and from Fiftieth-street to Fifty-second. These he converted into gardens and paddock. He was a man of considerable taste, and he laid out this large space very beautifully, though in somewhat of the old-fashioned style. He had beautiful lawns and fine flower-beds, but the two were kept distinct, and the latter were arranged in formal geometric figures, with huge borders of box-wood. The evergreens were clipped into fantastic forms, and the flowers were allowed to grow to a great height, those being principally chosen which delight more by their fragrance than their color. In short, it was something very similar to Lady Corisande's garden in Disraeli's novel. He was a lover of fine trees, and he imported English walnuts, oaks and elms, which he mingled judiciously with the American denizens of the forest. He constructed a fish-pond at the bottom of the garden, and built out beyond it a sort of fairy isle, all treillis-work and clustering vines, uniting the two with a rustic bridge. He imported a choice breed of peacocks, who have multiplied until their cheerful cry has become somewhat a nuisance to their neighborhood. And being in his way a lover of art, he filled the winding walks of his beautiful gardens with choice statuary, rampant lions, dragons, faithful hounds, &c., of the type which the connoisseur will remember in the shelters of the manufacturers of fancy chimney pots. The General being a very popular man, and one greatly given to hospitality, was extremely fond of entertaining the distinguished men of the Democratic Party, of which he was a shining light, and accordingly the fame of the old house became great among New-Yorkers. To visit at the Stryker house was an envied privilege, and the inmates of the Hopper mansion were among the happy ones. Perhaps in those days their home did not look so desolate, but from its appearance now the surroundings must have been neglected for many years. It must have awakened queer emotions in them whenever they visited the Stryker mansion. For it had been built by the same old John Hopper, and in his time his homestead was the place of reunion for all of them, and was by far the finest and the grandest. But very by-year the one house had been losing in prestige, and the other had been gaining it, until at last one had reached the position of being a Municipal lion, and the other was the most dreary house on the island. The Stryker House is admirably preserved by its present owners, Mr. and Mrs. Stryker. They keep up the garden with all the traditionary splendor, and the whole seven acres are still unimpaired. But there is a fly in the ointment, as the Arabs say: a drop of bitter in their cup. The line of Fifty-first-street will cut their house right in half, if completed to the river. Hitherto the end of this street has been left untouched, for two reasons, first, because the Hudson River Railway, as represented by Mr. Vanderbilt, did not desire it, and, secondly, because Mr. Stryker was in himself a majority of the property owners concerned in the matter. But some arrangement must be come to sooner or later, and it is to be hoped that it will be one which will spare one of the very few beautiful spots in New-York which modern progress has left untouched. Stryker's Bay House, the old homestead, built by Jacobus Strycker, in 1646, has been devoured; the municipality must grant for the benefit of a descendant of one of the first founders of their City, a contemporary Magistrate with Guliel-mus Beekman.

THE FRIENDS.

Yearly Meeting of the Society, in Baltimore—Interesting Proceedings.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, Md., Monday, Oct. 28, 1872.

The annual meeting of one great branch of the Friends is now going on here, at their meeting-house on Lombard-street, and has drawn together a much larger number of its members than usual. They represent a denomination that has been foremost in nearly all the great reforms of the age, particularly on the subjects of war, temperance, a free Gospel ministry, and slavery, or, to express it in a single phrase, their opposition to all kinds of oppression. The interest excited among many who are not members of the Friends' Society is so great that yesterday the house was three times crowded to its utmost capacity. Among the notable ministers in attendance we see the venerable Benjamin Hallowell, formerly of Alexandria, Va., where for many years he conducted a school, in which many prominent Southerners were pupils, among them the afterward-distinguished Gen. Robert E. Lee. Benjamin Hallowell is one of the originators of the present system of governmental management of Indian affairs, and is one of President Grant's most trusted advisers on this subject. He is about seventy years of age, and was once robust, but shows something of the frailty of old age. He is not a fluent speaker, but is a ready writer, and one of the best educated men in the country, being particularly eminent as a naturalist. He has written much upon social and philosophical subjects, and is one of the leading minds in the Friends' denomination.

The Janney's are also prominent members of this yearly meeting. Samuel M. Janney is a widely-known Virginian, who has also been connected with the Indian Service, having been Superintendent in charge of one Indian Department for three years, sacrificing the comforts of home and friends, and solely on account of what he felt to be a religious duty required of him, laboring for the benefit of the savage wards of the nation. His brother, Asa M. Janney, who occupied a similar position with another branch of the Indian Service, is here also. Samuel M. is another who stands high in the estimation of Friends. He has written a life of William Penn, and a History of Friends, but he is a fine essayist, and a volumn of poems that he published several years ago merits warm commendation. Among the other notable men of the meeting is the venerable John Needles, now in his eighty-fifth year, who has attended for sixty-four years without ever missing a single meeting. He was formerly engaged in the furniture business, but retired from trade a good many years ago and has since devoted himself to philanthropic objects. He is one of the finest, most benevolent men living.

William Dorsey, a prominent and eloquent minister from Philadelphia, is regarded as one of the strong men of the meeting.

Two young men who have lately come into the ministry give, by their zeal and deportment, the promise of future usefulness. One of these is Elwood D. Conrad of New-Jersey, and the other James W. Haynes of Ohio. The former is only twenty-two, and the latter twenty-four years of age. The most prominent female minister here is Mary Lippincott, of Philadelphia.

The excellent Lucretia Mott used to attend all the meetings, but her advanced age and other circumstances have kept her away for the last two or three years. We miss, also, George Truman, the most eloquent of the Quaker preachers in this country. The most interesting feature of this yearly meeting will be a report from the Committee having charge of Indian Affairs, as it will furnish reliable information of matters on our Western frontier. Another feature of much interest is the conference of Friends from all parts of the country in reference to First-day schools—(Sunday-schools.) These were formerly discountenanced by many members of the society, but it is found that they awaken denominational interest among young persons, and are productive of much good, and the opposition to them is rapidly dying out. Life at the Penrhyn Slate Quarries.

In a letter from a special correspondent of the London Daily News we read: "In many respects—it may be said, indeed, in every respect but one—the manner in which Lord Penrhyn, as the proprietor of these vast quarries, and as the employer of the great labor power required for working them, acquits himself of the responsibilities which devolve upon him in these regards, demands the most unqualified admiration. The most untiring exertions are made to make of this busy hive a happy valley. There has not been a vestige of truck at Penrhyn Quarries for the last forty-seven years. The only deductions made in the wages of the men are for the requisite tools and blasting powder, and these are supplied at prime cost. It was but the other day, when a landslip buried a number of tools, that Lord Penrhyn gave £400 to fit out anew the men who had lost their implements. Thanks to care and science, the number of serious accidents are few—over a series of years they average, I was informed, but 4.5. But when a workman is killed, Lord Penrhyn pensions his widow and rears his children. He has built an hospital, containing twelve beds, the arrangements of which are of the very best character. There is a resident surgeon, an assistant, a nurse, and two attendants; the walls of the wards are hung with pictures; for grown people there is a library; for children there are toys. The number of inmates just now is four, and it was good to see them recovering in clean beds and amid fresh air, with flowering shrubs peeping in at the open windows, and the soothing murmur of the Ogden gently audible. The subscription to the 'fund' is one shilling weekly for each workman. For this is given medical attendance and medicine, the hospital if thought needed, three shillings six pence a week of allowance in sickness to the single man not in hospital, and the same to the wife and family of a married man even although the husband should be enjoying the benefits of the hospital. It need not be said that the unsubsidized subscriptions of the workpeople could not do all this, and I am told that Lord Penrhyn's contribution to maintain this fund in its efficiency is necessarily large. The education of the young is sedulously cared for. There are four national schools on the Penrhyn property, in addition to which Lord Penrhyn subscribes to a school in Bethesda, which village does not belong to him. The two salaries of the teachers are paid, and buildings, books, maps, firms, and lights are furnished by Lord Penrhyn, the nominal charge being made of 1d. per week per child, and 1½d. for two children of one family. The house accommodation is almost invariably good. On the Penrhyn estate there are a number of cottages which, while their gardens are let at very moderate rents, and are kept in thorough repair at the proprietor's cost, every facility is given for the men to build themselves, and a large number of cottages have been so built on plots of land, held leasehold for a term of forty years, at ground rents which are next to nominal, the landlord making the roads and the sewerage, and keeping them in repair. Then there are blanket and clothing funds, and coal funds, and other kindly little institutions of a like character, all of which have their origin in the beneficence of Penrhyn Castle. In fine, it has been deeply impressed upon me that, with a few reservations I am forced to make, it is impossible for any proprietor to recognize and fulfill the obligations of property with greater assiduity and with a freer hand than does the proprietor of the Penrhyn State Quarries. Nor is the good work barren. The quarry folk live orderly, sober, and

SANITARY MEASURES.

Important Meeting of the Board of Health Yesterday.

The Removal and Transportation of Brewers' Grains—The War Between the Scavengers and the Odorless Excavating Company—The Horse Disease.

A very important session of the Board of Health was held yesterday, President Bosworth in the chair.

The Sanitary Committee, to whom was referred the subject of the removal of brewers' grains from the City, presented the following report:

To the Board of Health:

The question of removal of the remnants of grain used in the operation of making beer, ale, &c., from the breweries and out of the City limits, having been referred to the Sanitary Committee, the following is respectfully submitted: The quantity of shells of grain, generally barley, produced in the making of beer, ale, &c., in the sixty odd breweries within our City limits is very large, amounting, perhaps, to a million of bushels, if not more, in a year. The value of this so-called brewery-grain as feed for cattle and hogs is not represented by the low price the brewer gets for it; for once in the rural districts it is worth four times the amount paid for it in the City. Nearly all the phosphates of the grain, as well as a portion of its fatty and oleagneous compounds, are retained in the shells obtained by the process of washing, constituting it a valuable nutriment in the fattening of domestic animals destined for the meat market, as well as for milk cows.

During the season of beer-making these grain-shells are accumulating in the breweries so fast and in such large quantities as to become a burden and impediment to the brewers, if no provision for their speedy removal is made. This inconvenience, within a brief time, would be so great as to completely back up the business of the just-named tradesmen. A nuisance in a sanitary respect the grains in question can only become through carelessness and the want of proper precaution in the loading and removing of the same. If the material is allowed during the hot season to stand exposed for hours or days to the rays of the sun, fermentation will act in, and by degrees it will turn sour and putrid; the same change will take place with the drippings from the cars, if allowed to soak the ground, instead of being washed off and carried into a sewer. All these complaints, however, could be easily removed, if the permit established by the following provisions would be granted to the manufacturers and carriers of the brewery grains:

First. The grain loaded at the breweries shall be carried in wagons sufficiently tight as regards their boxes to avoid any dripping from the same while passing through the streets or public thoroughfares.

Second. The unloading of said wagons in the railroad yard shall be conducted in a careful manner, and the grain falling to the ground not suffered to remain and accumulate, but be taken up and removed with the rest.

Third. The railroad yard when the grains are received and loaded on the cars shall be provided with proper gutters, connected with the sewer, in order to have the drippings thus received turned into it.

Fourth. The grains sliding off the cars must not accumulate in said gutters, but be likewise taken up and carried away.

Fifth. Except in severe winter weather no loading of brewery grains outside the yard of the railroad company, or on any street or public thoroughfare, shall be allowed, and the loaded cars shall not stand on the same exposed to the sun beyond a reasonable time; in other words the removal shall take place daily, if not oftener.

Sixth. All the foregoing provisions do also apply to those where the removal of brewery grains from the City is effected by water or any other manner. The Committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Attorney of the Board be and is hereby instructed to draw the form of a permit for the removal of brewery grains from the City, embracing within said draft the restrictions and provisions above mentioned.

(Signed,) S. CECCARINI, Chairman.

The recommendations contained in the report were adopted, and the Board directed that permits be issued to Messrs. F. & M. Schaefer and one other brewer, in accordance with the new requirements.

The Sanitary Committee also presented the following elaborate report in respect to the emptying of privy vaults and cess-pools and removing their contents:

The undersigned members of the Sanitary Committee respectfully submit the following report on the several petitions and communications relating to the business of scavenging, and the ordinance thereon: referred to the Sanitary Committee.

The removal and disposition of night-soil in such manner as to avoid the nuisance liable in handling such offensive material, and to protect the public health, is a most important duty devolving upon the Board of Health. That the methods of scavenging that in vogue in this City have been recognized as exceedingly imperfect, and have been the subject of constant complaint by citizens. The work was done in the rude manner, and was an improvement upon the practiced fifty years ago. It was as follows: The contents of sinks were taken out in buckets and poured into a large open tub. When this was filled it was carried, uncovered, through halls or alleys-ways to the street, and emptied into a loosely-covered water-tight cart. The result was that the contents of the sinks were thoroughly agitated and exposed to the air, and gave out volumes of offensive odors, which filled the whole neighborhood, and penetrated every adjacent dwelling. The offensive matter was also scattered in the yards and halls, rendering them foul for several days. During the transportation in carts imperfectly covered, the semi-liquid materials often escaped, and the offensive gases so pervaded all the streets through which the carts passed that citizens protested against the scavengers being allowed to go through streets in which they lived. Even the empty cart was so offensive as it went through the streets as to compel the people to close their windows. Nor did it unfrequently happen that loaded carts broke down, and deposited their contents in the street, thus creating a new and most disgusting nuisance. To obviate as far as possible the necessary nuisance created by this method of scavenging, ordinances have been adopted requiring scavengers to work only late at night, when the people are in bed, to disinfect the contents of sinks before removal, to have covered carts, and to go to and from their places of business through the least frequented streets, and generally by the most circuitous routes.

The undersigned have long regarded this method of scavenging as a great sanitary evil. The air of densely-populated districts is largely filled with the most poisonous and disgusting emanations from the contents of sinks for the process of removal, and low forms of fever, diarrhœa, dysenteries, &c., are thereby created and continually aggravated during the warmer months. When this work is most actively carried on, there has been such an increase of these diseases, that it has been deemed advisable to discontinue the business until the cooler months. But no adequate remedy has until recently been offered, and the evils of the old system had to be endured. Within the past year, however, parties have introduced into this country new methods of scavenging now adopted and practiced in the cities of Europe. On application to this Board for a license as scavengers, the Sanitary Committee was directed to examine their apparatus and its operation, and report thereon.

The apparatus consists of an exhaust pump, worked by hand, placed upon a wagon; from this pump on one head a four-inch hose, nicely jointed, is carried through the alley-way to the sink, where it is screwed to a metal section perforated at its extremity. This metal section is carried to the bottom of the sink. On the other head a section of hose proceeds from the pump to an air-tight receiver of eighty-five cubic feet capacity. When the exhaust pipe is set in motion the contents of the sinks are drawn into the receiver and delivered into the receiver without the slightest exposure to the air. The contents of the sink are not agitated at all, except immediately around the pipe, where an insignificant amount is thrown to reverse materials, like cloths, sticks, &c., obstructing the perforations. On the removal of all the semi-liquid materials, the stones, bricks, ashes, and other accumulations are removed in cans, lowered, when practicable, into the vault, and tightly covered when filled. When the receiving tank is filled it is driven to the boat and emptied by attaching a hose. The Committee witnessed the performance of this apparatus on many occasions, and under a variety of circumstances. The work was carried on in the daytime, in crowded thoroughfares, and no passer-by was aware of the nature of the business. When the air-tight receiver, or tank, was conveyed to the boat it passed through the streets at midday without any one suspecting the nature of the contents.

The Committee came to the unanimous conclusion that this method of scavenging was a great and necessary sanitary improvement, and recommended the adoption of an ordinance requiring the work to be done by means of an air-tight vessel, or in a manner to prevent the escape of gases.

On the 31st day of July the Board accordingly adopted an ordinance, which was subsequently amended, and now reads as follows:

SECTION 179.—From and after the 1st day of September, 1872, no part of the contents of any privy, vault, sink, cesspool, except substances other than excrementitious matter, and with sufficient water, or any offensive fluid, liquid or semi-liquid substance or material being in any excavation, cellar or place within the limits of the City of New-York, shall be removed during the hours between the ordinary bed time of any of the streets or avenues of said City, unless and except the same shall be removed and transported by means of an air-tight apparatus, or in such manner as shall prevent entirely the escape of any noxious or offensive odors therefrom, and by a permit from this Department.

Since this ordinance took effect, several parties have offered to the Board for license as scavengers, but as yet but one party, viz.: "The Manhattan Odorless Excavating Company" has furnished the requisite apparatus, and performed the work properly. This Company received a license on the 4th day of September, and since that date have been actively employed in the work of scavenging. We have almost daily inspected their work, and are entirely satisfied with the results. Perilous fears and remonstrances against this method of scavenging and other papers have been, from time to time, referred to the Committee. These petitions and remonstrances of citizens are of about equal weight and importance, and do not affect the merits of the question. The objections made to the new method are:

First—The laboring men formerly engaged by the scavengers are thereby thrown out of employment. This is not true, as the Company now at work engage to employ them. But even if it were true, it is the same objection that has always been urged when labor-saving machines have been introduced.

Second—It is alleged that the solid contents of sinks are not pumped out, but are removed in cans. This objection has no weight whatever. Matters that require to be sluiced out of course cannot be removed by a pump. Cans with air-tight covers are lowered into the sink when possible and when filled, are covered and conveyed without being opened or disturbed to the boat.

Third—It is alleged that the Company overcharge. This is an old complaint made against all scavengers. As the ordinance limits the charge, any person aggrieved can make his complaint to this Board and obtain redress.

Fourth—It is alleged that the ordinance creates a monopoly. This is not true. The ordinance is based upon the fact, demonstrated to us by Boards, that scavenging may be so done as practicably to remove it of all offense. There are many methods of effecting this object. The machinery employed by the Manhattan Odorless Excavating Company is but one of many kinds that will secure this end. But as yet that Company is the only party that has complied with the ordinance. In New-Orleans, Chicago, Cincinnati, and other cities in this country, the same odorless method of removing the contents of sinks is required as by the ordinance of this Board, and several different kinds of apparatus are employed. In conclusion, the Committee were of the opinion that the ordinance should not be repealed, but should be rigidly enforced. As the Manhattan Odorless Excavating Company use apparatus that fully complies with the requirements of the ordinance, a license should be granted to it. Licenses should also be granted to all parties who supply themselves with apparatus of whatever kind which enables them to do the work properly.

The Committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a license as scavenger be granted to the Manhattan Odorless Excavating Company.

Resolved, That licenses as scavengers be granted to all responsible parties who do the work in such manner as to fully comply with the ordinance of this Board.

GIOVANNI CECCARINI, M. D.,
STEPHEN SMITH, M. D.,
MAGNUS GROSS,
} Committee.

Mr. Manierre said that the ordinance was passed on the 31st day of July, and but thirty days were allowed for a change in a system which had been in use over fifty years. He considered this too short a time to give the scavengers, who were thus thrown out of their business. They should have had several months to experiment with different apparatus. There was now, as he understood it, but one apparatus, and that was patented. The scavengers were entitled to more consideration. He moved, therefore, to grant permits to all persons using air-tight cans. He believed that the Board had acted hastily and unwisely, and that the ordinance was "sprung" upon the Board during his absence.

Dr. Smith said that the Commissioner might as well move to repeal the ordinance at once.

Mr. Manierre said he would do that even, to oblige Dr. Smith. He insisted that the ordinance had been adopted unwisely and hastily, and while he was absent from the City, during the passage, he saw a report in the Times in which the President was reported as having denounced the matter as a "job."

Dr. Ceccarini interrupted excitedly, saying, "Where's the job? where's the job?"

Dr. Smith said that he saw no reason why the greatest sanitary improvement which had been made in this City for years past should be now abandoned. It was a well-established fact that persons had been killed by the inhalation of noxious and unwholesome gases emitted from old scavenger-carts passing through the streets.

President Bosworth explained that unless it was the intention to amend the ordinance the motion of Mr. Manierre was unnecessary. The Board could repeal the ordinance and re-enact it to take effect at a later period. That was the only way to meet the question squarely.

Dr. SMITH—And honorably.

Dr. Ceccarini said he favored the motion of Mr. Manierre, because he was in favor of open competition between the scavengers and the Manhattan Odorless Excavating Company. If both systems were allowed to be used for a few months the public would soon be able to judge of the merits of the same, and the different systems. He thought it improper for the Board to take part between two systems, or to make itself a part of a project for the benefit of one system.

Mr. Manierre said that, while he was not opposed to the Company, he did not think that the scavengers had been allowed sufficient time to conform to the orounances of the Board, and it was, therefore, wrong.

Mr. Barr made a forcible appeal in behalf of the Company. He said that the apparatus had been tested for several months before it was adopted, and the scavengers were aware of it. Instead of inventing some machine to beat the apparatus of the Company, they contented themselves with throwing every obstacle in the way of the operations of the Company. Every new invention and improvement had been denounced as a monopoly. Let the scavengers go into Yankee land and set Yankee wit to work to invent a better machine. Although he had formerly opposed the ordinance, he was now firmly in favor of it, as it was without doubt a great sanitary improvement.

President Bosworth said that when the ordinance was first proposed it was referred to the Counsel to the Law and Ordinances, and remained in their hands three weeks. At a regular meeting of the Board, when the Chairman was the only member of the Committee present, the report was called for, and Mr. Henry Smith moved that the Committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject and the ordinance adopted. The mode of procedure was so singular, and the matter was pressed so hard, that he did at the time remark that it looked like a "job."

The vote was then taken on the adoption of the resolutions as above, and they were adopted by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Barr, Bosworth, Ceccarini, Gross, and S. Smith. Nays—Messrs. Manierre and Mulally.

An application was then presented from the night scavengers asking for permits to clean privy vaults, &c., under the old system, with some few modifications, and this application was referred to the Committee on Law and Ordinances.

THE HORSE DISEASE.

The Sanitary Committee reported that during the past week they have continued their investigations of the epidemic prevalent among horses. In the belief that a thorough and exhaustive study of the origin, cause, and nature of this epizootic may throw important light upon the best means for the prevention of epidemic diseases as they prevail in man, the Committee are desirous of more ample means for pursuing these investigations. They have also undertaken an examination of the condition of the cattle, hogs, and sheep brought to this market, and of the precautions in vigilance that should be maintained of all the stock arriving here, and a careful examination by experts should be made of sick and dead animals. The Committee recommended the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sanitary Committee is hereby requested to continue the investigation of the cause and character of the disease now prevailing among horses, and that the sum of $1,000 be and is hereby appropriated for such purpose, to be expended under the direction of the Committee, and that the Committee be and is hereby authorized to investigate the disease said to exist among beef cattle, swine, &c., and to use the necessary means to that end, and to make a detailed report of expenditures, &c., to the Board.

This resolution was unanimously adopted.

A communication was received from Dr. Adams, of No. 62 West Fourteenth-street, stating that two cases had came under his notice where men had taken the horse disease from horses, and asking the Board to prevent all travel by horse-power for a few days. Referred to the Sanitary Committee.

Messrs. Kane & Ryan, contractors for the removal of manure from stables in this City, applied for permission to dump straw which had been used for bedding in stables on their lots extending from the foot of Forty-fifth to Forty-eighth-street along the East River during the prevailing epidemic. Referred to Sanitary Committee.

The Sanitary Committee submitted the following report of the work of the different bureaus for the week ending Oct. 26, 1872:

The City Sanitary Inspector reports a total of 1,654 inspections by the Health Inspectors, as follows: Two public buildings, 664 tenement-houses, 28 private dwellings, 13 other dwellings, 1 unhabitable dwelling, 8 manufactories and workshops, 44 stores and warehouses, 116 stables, 45 slaughter-houses, 23 fat-rendering establishments, 1 gut-cleaning establishment, 24 nuisance dumps, 1 market, 25 sunken and vacant lots, 65 yards, courts and areas, 33 cellars and basements, 44 waste-pipes and drains, 438 privies and water-closets, 29 streets, gutters, and sidewalks, 4 disinfections, 12 examinations of dangerous buildings, 1 other nuisances and 18 visits of the Health Inspectors to cases of contagious diseases. The number of reports thereon received from the Health Inspectors was 490. During the week 50 complaints have been received from citizens and referred to the Health Inspectors for investigation and report. The disinfecting corps have visited 15 premises where contagious diseases were found, and have performed disinfection in 15 houses, 15 privy-vaults, together with clothing, bedding, &c.; 15 cases of small-pox were removed to hospital, and 1 dead body to the Morgue by the ambulance corps. There have been granted to 58 vessels to discharge cargoes, on vouchers from the Health Officer of this Port. During the week 89 families have been visited, to whom vaccination was offered, and 61 vaccinations performed, of which 7 were successful and 52 secondary. The following is a comparative statement of contagious diseases for the two weeks ending Oct. 19 and Oct. 26, 1872.

Oct. 19—Typhus fever, 7; typhoid fever, 18; scarlet fever, 25; measles, 2; diphtheria, 15; small-pox, 3.

Oct. 26—Typhus fever, 5; typhoid fever, 15; scarlet fever, 35; measles, 6; diphtheria, 22; small-pox, 16.

Dr. Doremus, Registrar of Records, reports as follows: During the past week there were registered 440 deaths, being a decrease of 43 from the previous week, and 38 less than for the corresponding week of 1871. Zymotic diseases occasioned 146 deaths; constitutional, 109; local, 138; developmental, 36, and violent causes, 11. The fatal cases of small-pox increased from 2 to 3; those of measles from 2 to 4; those of diphtheria and croup from 24 to 32; those of typhus fever from 3 to 3, and those of remittent, intermittent and cerebro-spinal fevers respectively from 4 to 5. The mortality of scarlatina declined from 11 to 7, that of whooping cough from 5 to 4, that of typhoid fever from 11 to 3, that of typho-malarial fever from 4 to 2, and that of diarrhœal diseases from 65 to 55. The deaths by phthisis-pulmonalis amounted to 83—an increase of 5, and those by the local respiratory complaints, 38—an increase of 10. There were 14 deaths from Bright's disease, and 4 from puerperal affections; 70 deaths took place in hospitals and other institutions; 30 deaths were certified by Coroners. There were 3 suicides and 11 deaths due to accident or negligence; 198 deaths occurred among children less than five years old, and 25 among persons of seventy years old and upward. The following were the principal meterological feature of the week, as recorded for this Department, at the Cooper Union: Maximum temperature, 61°; mean temperature, 55.06°—being 2.46° higher than that of the corresponding period during the past ten years. Mean reading of barometer, 30.159 inches. Mean degree of humidity, 75.34.

The Cashier of the Sanitary Company of Police reports the following as the amount of meat, fish, &c., seized and condemned as unfit for human food: Sheep, 1; hogs, 10; veal "carcass," 6; lambs, 1; beef, 241 pounds; poultry, 135 pounds; game, 12 pounds; fish, 125 pounds.

In regard to the sudden increase of small-pox during the past week, referred to above, Dr. Janes, the City Sanitary Inspector, reported that seven of the cases were of one family residing at No. 20 Chrystie-street, the first case being an infant, who died without medical attendance, and the case was reported from the Coroner's office two days after death. The whole family were vaccinated the next day, but too late to save them from contagion, and each member of the family was successively attacked. The child had never been vaccinated, and the other members of the family had not been vaccinated since infancy. The Sanitary Committee will take the ..... into consideration.

THE HALL TRIAL.

Continuation of the Argument for the Defense.

All the Charges Denied in Toto—The Difference Between Garvey and Hall—The Accused a Persecuted Man.

The trial of Mayor Hall was resumed yesterday, before Judge Brady in the Court of Oyer and Terminer. Mr. Stoughton commenced to sum up at the opening of the Court, and continued until the adjournment at 4 o'clock, when he concluded. Mr. Tremain will sum up today, but it is not probable the case will be submitted to the jury until to-morrow. Mr. Stoughton, in proceeding to sum up for the defense, regretted that the duty did not devolve on an abler counsel, but assured them that in whatever he said, whatever reference he made to tainted or uncontradicted evidence should be based upon his own honest convictions on the facts of the case. He felt personally as great an interest in the safety, honor, and welfare of the City as any of the gentlemen who appeared for the prosecution, and if he believed that Mayor Hall was guilty of the charges imputed to him, he was one of the wickedest men living, and deserving of the severest punishment. The charge was specifically a conspiracy with other wretches to rob the City of $6,000,000, and no man in this community rejoiced more than he did at the unearthing and exposure of those gigantic frauds. The air was filled with the wildest rumors, the people were roused to the highest state of excitement; the Press, generally, teemed with denunciations of the thieves, but he lamented that in that condemnation there was not the slightest discernment, and the innocent were denounced with the guilty. For twelve years Mr. Hall filled the onerous position of District-Attorney with honor and ability; he was re-elected to the office of Chief Magistrate of the City, and disregarding his position as counsel for the defendant, he boldly declared his personal belief in his perfect and complete innocence. For upward of a year he was the victim of these denunciatory charges, and when he saw the jury impaneled to determine upon his guilt or innocence, his heart rejoiced within him, for he found that his deliverance was at hand. Mr. Stoughton drew the attention of the jury to the confessions of the guilt and crime on the part of Garvey, adverting particularly to his admission that he honestly believed in Mr. Hall's ignorance of the frauds to which he was an innocent party. He was not aware of the circumstances of the bargain which induced Garvey to appear in Court and bespeak his own infamy, but he declared to the sworn legal authorities that such testimony should be wholly ignored. Garvey's plea was simply necessity. With others he fled the City to escape the people's vengeance, but Mr. Hall, conscious of his integrity, boldly challenged an investigation and assisted the prosecution in the efforts in that direction. Garvey knew it well. His belief in Hall's innocence it truthfully expressed, was actual knowledge. Counsel pointed to Mr. Peckham's opening to bolster up the weakest of weak cases, and claimed that the prosecution has substantially abandoned the case altogether, upon the specific charges of immense frauds they had come down to a simple case of negligence, and a professional zeal alone justified its submission to the jury. Political animosities and personal hate had been brought to bear everywhere against Mr. Hall, and two of the ablest private counsel in the State were employed to assist the Chief District-Attorney. But their efforts hardly established the slightest technical offense. It was conceded even by the prosecution that not a dollar of these millions was in his pockets, and what could be his motive to enrich others, his only reward being their own degradation? Active and prominent in the political life of this City for twenty years, Mr. Hall's reputation for integrity and honor was never questioned until now, on the evidence of Davidson, Garvey, and Keyser. When these men were on the stand, the forged, fraudulent, and ficticious bills were produced and admitted in evidence on the statement of counsel that he would connect Mr. Hall with them. What evidence was there adduced to substantiate the statement of the prosecution? He presumed that that statement was made under the belief that he could establish it, but if Garvey so gave him authority to understand, even perjury in the face of Mr. Hall was dumbfounded. He maintained that the testimony was clearly inadmissible; that it was tendered with an ulterior purpose, not by the counsel, but by those outside the case, with a view to affect political and individual interests. The bills and vouchers that Mr. Hall was a guilty participator in the frauds connected with Garvey's checks, which the prosecution proposed to establish. Failure, miserable failure attended the effort. Throughout the land Hall had been condemned, and, if guilty of those crimes, he was justly consignable to eternal infamy. But if the counsel connected him with them, he asserted fearlessly that, before such an offer should have been made, better evidence of its proof should be discovered than the word of a self-convicted thief. After the development of these robberies, Mr. Hall continued to discharge his duties faithfully, his appointments and his conduct as Mr. Green's counsel fervently applauded, he was most pertinacious in hunting up the thieves, and not one of his alleged associates had the temerity to breathe criminality against him. A strong point of the prosecution was, that the largeness of the amount of the bills presented for signature should have attracted the Mayor's attention. An honest man was incapable of a mean suspicion of that nature. Others, chosen by the people, like himself, were equally instrumental in the payment of those bills, and when he began to suspect their integrity it was a natural presumption that he would expect that his suspicion was the inevitable sequence of self-guilt, but here was a man, genial, kind-hearted, unsuspicious, and friendly, and the last idea that would be likely to possess him would be one so ungenerous and dishonorable. Mr. Stoughton called attention to the presence of the piece of silver spoken of in Garvey's testimony, en passant speaking of Mr. Tremain's nomination for a high office, and his vehement denunciations of the idea that such presents to public men should be regarded in the light of a bribe. But here the present, light and trivial, had not originate with Garvey, and altogether the suggestion simply indicated the effort of a failing case to catch at the merest straw. He ridiculed the supposition that while Mr. Hall was engaged in a conspiracy to rob the City of millions of dollars he refused to sign a warrant for $40,000 until he received this little present. Nothing was more ridiculous, except, perhaps, supposing that he would furnish written evidence of his guilt by sending such a letter as Garvey attested to. As regards Garvey's conversation with Mayor Hall, and the latter asking if the bills presented were those Mr. Tweed was interested in, counsel asserted that the true and only interpretation was this, that Mr. Tweed, being on the Street Commission, gave information to Garvey in the ususual course of business, and the expression was a simple and commonplace one. Taken in connection with Garvey's belief in the Mayor's innocence, his wish that he had not known of these robberies before, and his advisement of Garvey to commence suits against the City, no other just and reasonable conclusion could be arrived at. Counsel read the evidence of Mr. Smedley relating to Garvey's conversation with Mayor Hall, in which Garvey asked the Mayor if the commencement of a suit against the City would change their relations. The Mayor replied that it would not, and Garvey's remark proved conclusively that it was no concern of the Mayor's. The counsel on the other side, Mr. Tremaine, in a speech delivered by him on Friday evening at Newburg, spoke of the trial of Hall, but declined to pronounce an opinion as to his guilt or innocence until the termination of the proceedings. He missed his learned brother success in all things, and if he failed in convicting the Mayor he hoped he would succeed in getting elected. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREMAIN—What paper did you read?

Mr. Stoughton said he only read it in one paper—the TIMES—an authority which he would not dispute. Laughter and applause.] Coming down, however to the main issue, he described the case against the defendant as dust and ashes, and one which ought never to have been brought into a Court of justice. He read the law on the case, and contended that it provided punishment only for wilful neglect of duty, and not for an improper discharge of said duty. He cited the authority of Judges Miller, Potter, and Parker, reported in 3d Lansing in support of his theory, contending that persistency in refusing to discharge a duty and not negligence or want of knowledge, was the punishable offense. The statute was not not intended to punish misfeasance, but only wilful non-feasance. Did the law declare that if a man intending to perform his duty, performed imperfectly, was guilty of a crime? Undoubtedly not; the only real inference was directly the reverse. The Auditors met on the 1st of January, 1870, and determined on the basis of the evidence on which they would certify. If in signing bills signed by the other two, and the County Auditor, the Mayor refused and neglected to audit them he would be guilty of every one of the charges. The resolution of the 5th of May, 1870, made it the duty of the bring before them for audit bills which had been approved by the Supervisors, and the authentication if met approval was to be the signature of the Board or Audit and the Clerk or the Supervisors. He could hear the defendant say, "There are many bills, some fraudulent, floating around the City; some of them have been before the Supervisors; let us agree as a Board not to audit any of them unless we have proof that they passed the Supervisors." Surely, that was not neglecting to audit.

It would have been an outrage on the part of the Mayor to suspect his associates of wrong without justification; but when it was made evident, through the public Press, he called upon Connolly to resign, and suggested the appointment of a committee of the Common Council and a committee of citizens to investigate the accounts, and out of that came the Committee of Seventy.

Counsel concluded: I have but few words to say. We have all suffered by the frauds; but let us not think of inflicting a wild justice, a brutal justice. I am shocked that a man so stainless, as this case shows my learned friend to be, should be charged with a crime, technical or otherwise, which would bring with it such social consequences. I trust that whatever you do gentlemen, you will be justified.

At the conclusion of Mr. Stoughton's address the Court adjourned.

LOUISIANA.

Election Prospects—Warmoth's Preparations to Count His Ticket In—Vindictiveness of the Southern Greeleyites.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday, Oct. 26, 1872.

The reports of those gentlemen who have just returned from a canvassing tour of this State are favorable as to the success of the Republican ticket by from ten thousand to twenty thousand majority. On the other hand, Gov. Warmoth and his friends claim that the opposition will have a large majority. There is no doubt, that if there is no fraud perpetrated by Warmoth and his satellites, the Republican majority will be quite large. It is now generally understood among the leaders of the Democratic-Liberal Party that, with the aid of the election machinery in the hands of their friend Warmoth, the Republican ticket is to be counted out, without regard to the number of votes which may be polled for it. Under the Election laws of this State the entire registration and manipulation of the ballot-boxes is under the control and management of the Governor and his appointees. The amendments which were passed by the late Legislature, under a spasmodic fit of reform, changing the system of appointments of election officers, were not signed by the Governor, and were never intended to be. Gov. Warmoth had made the appointment of such men as he knows and feels assured will perform their duty in such manner as is suited to his ambitious purposes.

He is a candidate for the United States Senatorship, to succeed Hon. W. P. Kellogg, and, in order to attain the object of his ambition, all the necessary arrangements have been made to count in the McEnery-Penn ticket, with legislative and parish officers of the same stripe. These members of the Legislature are pledged beforehand to elect Gov. Warmoth United States Senator, in return for which the ticket headed by McEnery is to be declared elected. The compact thus made also includes the commissioning, by the Governor, the most of the candidates of the Liberal-Democratic Party for parish officers, including this city and parish. In the counting of the votes for State and parish officers, after the closing of the polls on the 5th of next month, the presence and attendance of the United States Supervisors of Election, after the canvassing of the Presidential and Congressional ticket, is to be entirely ignored by the State registrars and supervisors. The State and parish boxes are to be kept separate from the Presidential and Congressional, and the canvass of the former is to be made by the State appointees at some place separate and apart from that where the latter was made, and the result certified according to the prearranged plan of Warmoth and his allies. Thus the people of the State are to be cheated and defrauded, and its Government is to be placed in the hands of the enemies of the Administration. In the event of this plot and conspiracy being consummated, as it is now the purpose of the parties to it to do, then, on the 1st of January next, the people of the State will witness the spectacle of a dual Government—that is to say, two Governors, two sets of State officers and two Legislatures. It is quite well understood that if the attempted fraud is executed by Gov. Warmoth, and the McEnery-Penn ticket announced as elected by him, contrary to the actual vote of the people of the State, that Senator Kellogg will announce himself and his colleagues upon the Republican ticket duly elected, call together the Republican members of the Legislature, and proceed to the organization of the regularly-constituted State Government, and request the authorities in Washington to sustain him in maintaining a republican form or government. Gov. Warmoth, as is well known to the people of this State, will use every means which he can command, whether legal or illegal, to accomplish his purpose to defeat the Democratic ticket in the United States Senate, and that if there will be trouble on account of it, to the injury and detriment of the people of this State, is the opinion of many who know the man and his antecedents.

All the local conventions of this city and parish have met and made their nominations. Nowhere throughout the country has there been so much open and corrupt bribery in the purchase of delegates for the nomination of the various city and parish offices which are to be voted for at the present election. For every office there were at least fifty candidates, and, according as the office was considered a profitable one, it was the more corruptly contested. In the so-called Republican Convention, composed principally of negroes, the system of bribery and corruption was disgraceful. There were to be nominated a Mayor, seven City Administrators, a Civil Sheriff, a Criminal Sheriff, eight District Judges, eight Clerks of District Courts, and three Coroners. The price of the Civil Sheriff nomination was $17,000, which was paid by Mr. Sauvinet, the present incumbent; the Mayor cost between $10,000 and $15,000, the Criminal Sheriff $10,000, the several Administrators from $5,000 to $8,000, the Judges and Clerks of Courts about the same price. In the late Radical Democratic Conventions about the same system prevailed, so that Louisiana and New-Orleans may be considered par excellence the paradise of conventions. Verily, there is need or reform here, and the sooner it begins the better.

In connection with the canvass of the State of Mississippi, showing the vindictiveness of the enemies of the Republican Party, is the following: Senator Ames, with other Republican speakers engaged in advocating the measures of the present Administration, were at a place called West Point, on the evening of the 23d inst., when, after addressing a large number of people, they went to a public boring hotel, where they had taken lodgings for the night. These gentlemen, consisting of Senator Ames, State Senator Sullivan, and Capt. Pease, were placed in a part of the house, whether from design or not has not been developed, where in case of fire they would be entirely cut off from egress by the stairways leading from the first to the second and third stories of such buildings. After retiring for the night, and when all were wrapped in profound sleep, the house was fired, it is said, by a political incendiary, and Senator Ames and his party barely escaped with their lives, the Senator letting himself down from the second story by the sheets of the bed on which he lay. The matter is now undergoing investigation by the local authority, as it is charged that the object of attempting to burn this hotel occupied by these gentlemen, was that they might be thus consumed, and as an atrocious act of vengeance on the part of the unforgiving Kuklux of that State.

Accident to Gen. John C. Robinson.

From the Binghamton Republican, Oct. 29.

On Thursday night last Gen. John C. Robinson, our candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, met with an accident of a kind which threatened very serious personal injury, but from which he escaped with only a few slight bruises. Gen. Robinson spoke at Fredonia in the evening, and at the close of the meeting was conveyed to Judge Barker's house in the village. There the soldiers gave him a fine serenade. At about 11 o'clock he started in a carriage, with Hon. George Isham, for Dunkirk, three miles distant. The night was dark; nobody could see a foot ahead; but the horse plunged forward rapidly. It was soon found that the carriage was beyond control, and the wheels passing into a rut, the driver, Mr. Isham, was thrown out, while Gen. Robinson retained his seat. There he sat, having no reins and the horse running fearfully. He rode about half a mile. The carriage then upset and threw him out. On the solid ground he rolled over a few times, the carriage passed on without injuring him, and he continues the campaign. He will speak at several places this week.

Loss of the Brig Emily, of New-York—The Captain and Crew Rescued and Brought to this Port.

Capt. Eldridge, of the brig Emily, makes the following report: Sailed from Jacksonville Bar Oct. 14, with a cargo of yellow pine lumber; had north-east winds to Cape May, when the wind hauled to west-south-west; passed Barnegat Oct. 26, at 4 A. M., Fire Island Light bore north by west; at 5 P. M., Oct. 27, off Block Island, had a heavy squall from north-west; hauled by the wind, which veered round to north-east, vessel heading east-south-east; at 10 P. M., wind increasing to a gale, and the vessel leaking badly, all hands at the pumps; at 6½, wore ship to the westward; Oct. 28, at noon, saw pilot-boat No. 9, to leeward; kept off to speak her; at 5 P. M., the leak increasing, and the vessel settling fast in the water, (water being then nearly up to the deck,) concluded to abandon her; 6 P. M., went on board the pilot-boat; at 9 P. M. the brig capsized, head down; she was transferred from the pilot-boat to the steam-ship Italy, and brought to this port. The Emily was twelve years old, built in New-York, was 223 tons burden, and owned by B. P. Sherman and others. Capt. Eldridge wishes to return his thanks to Capt. Henderson, of pilot-boat No. 9, and also to the Captain of the steam-ship Italy, for their kindness while in their respective vessels.

SCHUYLER COLFAX.

Speech of the Vice-President at Grand Rapids.

Vigorous Defense of the Republican Party and its Measures—Why President Grant Should be Re-Elected.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Oct. 30.—At a large Republican meeting here today Hon. Schuyler Colfax, Vice-President of the United States, delivered an address of nearly two hours' duration. Although the day was rainy, the Rink, which accommodates 5,000 persons, was unable to hold all who desired to gain admission.

MR. COLFAX'S SPEECH.

Mr. Colfax said he was glad of this opportunity to speak to the assembled thousands of Western Michigan, in vindication of the noble and patriotic party whose record was gloriously written on the most brilliant pages of our nation's history. Circumstances with which all were familiar had prevented his more active participation in this canvass. Ever since he returned from Washington, in June, the shadow of sickness, and sorrow, and suffering had been over his house; and before the Indiana State election he had only been able to speak eight times in his own city and counties near by, whence he could return to his post of affectionate duty every night. Since returning health had lifted the shadow from his heart and home, he had consented to speak ten or twelves times more in four North-western States; and the gratitude he owed to Michigan Republicans, who had always honored him at National Conventions as one of their own sons, had brought him here today. He had felt restrained also, by that old-fashioned public opinion, which forbade Presidents and Vice-Presidents from participating actively in the criminations and recriminations, the asperities and the personalities of Presidential canvasses. But, though he had already spoken more in this campaign than all of his predecessors combined in all the Presidential canvasses of our history, he had scrupulously avoided all personal criticisms, and had neither answered railing with railing, nor aspersion with invective. There was, however, no official impropriety in reminding one's fellow-citizens of history, nor could any official restraint prevent him from saying publicly and privately alike, that he marched only under the flag, and kept step only to the music of the grand old Republican Party of liberty and loyalty, with whose history and triumphs he had been so intimately associated.

RECORD OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

When the country, he said, was in the terrible agonies of civil war, and in spite of golden and living sacrifices heaped up on our country's altar, it was doubtful whether the Republic could be saved from destruction, there was only one party out of whose millions not a single man fled from the flag or struck at the nation's life; only one party not one of whose millions branded faithful soldiers as "Lincoln hirelings," or poured out vials of wrath and calumny on the faithful President who never despaired of the Republic. At that hour, when there was no United South and a divided North, when every measure to put down the rebellion was warred on as unconstitutional, and when predictions that the rebellion could not be subjugated mingled with arguments that you had no constitutional right to coerce a State, if the Republican Party had been stricken out of existence you would have had no country today. With parties as with individuals, the only safe, indeed the only orthodox rule is, to judge a tree by its fruits. "You cannot gather grapes from thorns, nor figs from thistles. An evil tree will not bring forth good fruit, nor will a good tree produce evil fruit. By their fruits shall ye know them." In power in the nation, as the Republican Party has been but a little over ten years, compare the United States of 1872 with the United States of 1852. In no other land, since the footsteps of time have been counted, has any political organization done so much in a single decade for liberty, for peace, for humanity, for nationality, for progress, or for reform, as the Republican Party of this nation. It calls upon no one to forget its past, but it turns its thoughts, not its back, toward that past, in which it has achieved so much for country and mankind.

ITS DEFENSE OF LINCOLN.

Again: When Abraham Lincoln struck at slavery, as the enemy of the Union, with the battle-axe of war power, there was only one party that stood by him, holding his hands in that great contest. Denounced, as he was, as an usurper and tyrant, as a violator of his oath, for attempting to shatter this giant wrong and to destroy it forever, the millions of the Republican Party stood by him as one man, defying prejudice and opprobrium, and, as they resolved to break every yoke and let the oppressed go free; and they conquered, because they were inspired by the right. But, if you could have stricken out of existence the Republican Party of 1864, slavery would still disgrace and dishonor the nation today, as threatening, as tyrannical, as oppressive, and as inhuman as ever

New-York City.

Although the Greeleyites feel in their bones that they are going to be horribly beaten next week, they still hope that they will snatch such a victory in the Congressional Districts as will enable them to harass and obstruct the Administration during its next term. That is all the Democrats are now fighting for. As the World let out yesterday, they want to "build up so formidable an opposition as will give the Grant party pause." We must frustrate this scheme. It would be very unfair to the Administration to elect it without giving it an adequate support in Congress. We say then, again and again, look after your Congressmen. Do all you can to help the good men, and to defeat fellows like the "Big Judge," JAMES BROOKS, FERNANDO WOOD, &c. Do not let us leave our work half done. We entreat our friends everywhere to pay the utmost attention to the constitution of the Forty-third Congress. Upon it the success of the Administration will mainly depend.

We all know by this time the sort of "principle" which has induced a section of the Democratic Party to take HORACE GREELEY as its candidate. It is as well, however, to hear the reasons occasionally from Democratic mouths. The New-York World of yesterday thus makes a clean breast of it: "It is evident that if GRANT is re-elected, no Democrat will have a place in his Cabinet, or any influence in his Administration; whereas, if Mr. GREELEY is the next President, a majority of his advisers will consist of Democratic statesmen." There you have the mask stripped off with a vengeance. The issue is put plainly before us—if GREELEY is elected, the Democrats will seize the Government. And not only the Democrats, but the very worst class of Democrats in the land, for respectable men are, as a rule, standing aloof from the conspiracy. Are the people willing to accept Democratic rule of such a kind and under such conditions?

The Tribune of yesterday has the following ungrateful stab at CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, E. O. PERIN, FERNANDO WOOD, A. M. BLISS, ERASTUS BROOKS, and a long list of other old Know-Nothing politicians, who have been working hard all Summer in writing and making speeches for HORACE GREELEY:

"Your neighbor who frankly tells you that he will vote for no man of your religious faith, and therefore votes against you, fights you fairly and openly. But if that same neighbor were to sneak by night into a closed lodge-room, and there take an oath that he would never vote for a man of your faith, keeping such oath a secret from you, he would treat you most unfairly and unjustly."

Now, CHAUNCEY DEPEW, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, has done the very thing which the Tribune here condemns. He has taken a secret oath never to support any Catholic—and yet he is on the same ticket with a Catholic. What, then, are we to think of CHAUNCEY DEPEW?

"It is very true," says the Professor, "that the country owes much to Gen. GRANT'S persistence and military skill during the war." This is a new discovery on the part of FENTON'S pupil. For the last four or five months, he has continually sneered at GRANT'S military record. Now he finds that even the remaining readers of the Tribune object to the process of throwing mud on the uniform of the conqueror of LEE, and he is forced to confine his libels to President GRANT, instead of abusing with equal impartiality GRANT the soldier and GRANT the statesman. Or, is it possible that, as a last desperate attempt to defeat the Republican candidate, the Tribune is to ostensibly advocate him? That would, indeed, be a heavy blow to the Republican cause.

We have abstained from making any comment on the merits of the case against Mayor HALL while the trial was in progress. The correction of a statement made by Mr. STOUGHTON, yesterday, on behalf of his client is not a breach of the rule we have observed. The counsel for the defense endeavored to make a little capital for the accused by claiming for him the credit of appointing Controller GREEN. The facts are these: When Controller CONNOLLY, on the advice of Mr. HAVEMEYER, appointed Mr. GREEN his deputy, in September, 1871, and practically resigned to him the charge of the Finance Department, Mayor HALL not only refused to accept the official oath of the Acting Controller, but refused to acknowledge his official position at all, and sent a circular round to the heads of the various local departments, advising them to take a similar course. Mayor HALL pressed the acceptance of the Controllership, which he held had become vacant by CONNOLLY'S act, upon Gen. MCCLELLAN, as well as upon other persons whom it was thought the Ring could trust. It was only on account of the impossibility of getting anybody to accept the position that a violent conflict for the possession of the Controller's office was averted. Mr. HAVEMEYER received the resignation of Controller CONNOLLY on the understanding that it was only to be given up in exchange for the appointment of Mr. GREEN. For several weeks Mayor HALL refused to comply with this condition, and it was only after the vote of the 7th of November last had left no doubt that the doom of the Ring was sealed that the Mayor signed the appointment of Mr. GREEN "for the full term." As to the amount of credit which he can claim for a course of action like this, we may safely leave the public to decide.

During the past two months we have announced the loss either by fire or wreck of four large ocean steam-ships, and today a fifth disaster is added to the list, with circumstances, as to loss of human life, even more terrible than any that have preceded it. We cannot think that those in charge of the ill-fated Missouri were properly informed as to their duties, the manner in which one boat after another was swamped inevitably suggesting this conclusion. Certainly, if Government investigation shall substantiate this supposition, some other results ought to attend it than mere formal censure, and vague recommendations regarding neglected precautions.

The hope of the future is in the young men of today, and all sincere Reformers will lose faith in the possibility of good government in this City if the Young Men's Municipal Reform Association fails to give as effective aid to the cause of Reform as it did last year. The struggle in favor of public honesty needs, at the present juncture, just such energy, activity and intelligence as these young men can bring into its ranks. They can help us to bring out a full vote, can guard unwary voters against the tricks of politicians, and can, in a dozen different ways, strengthen the hands of the people who are honestly striving to start the City on a new career of honest administration and general prosperity. The aid of the young Reformers cannot be dispensed with this year, and the resolve to finish a good work well begun ought to be sufficient incitement to renewed effort.

The signature of nearly every prominent business house in the City, will be found appended to the call for a mass-meeting to be held at the corner of Wall and Broad streets on Friday, at noon, to ratify the nomination of Mr. W. F. HAVEMEYER for Mayor. We trust that the signers of the call will not only be present to assist in making the meeting the imposing demonstration it ought to be, but that as soon as possible after 6 o'clock on the morning of Nov. 5 they will cast their votes and see that their friends do the same, for the Reform candidates.

The Fresh Fight for the Union.

The fight of next Tuesday is really a fight for the Union. To be sure, it is not fought with shot and shell, like Gettysburg or Vicksburg. But that which is fought for is so far the same, and those who fight are so far the same, that the struggle becomes almost identical. Precisely the same men yearn for the defeat of Gen. GRANT now, who yearned for his defeat in the Wilderness and at Five Forks. Precisely the same men who abused President LINCOLN, stirred up revolt against the draft, hung negroes to lamp-posts, in New-York, and approved of their crucifixion at Fort Pillow, are now rampant for GREELEY and opposed to the party of the Union. Victory or defeat now, as then, means the encouragement or discomfiture of the principles battled for from '61 to '65, and which aimed to assure the permanence and solidity of the Republic. Victory or defeat now, as then, would shape, and in a serious measure determine, nearly all those vast issues of public policy, to settle which the American people rose in their might and put down the rebellion.

These are strong statements, but not too strong. We have shown, over and over again, how the prominent men in the South, who were Secessionists and are Greeleyites, are exactly the men who go about talking of the ultimate triumph of the "Lost Cause," and breathing mysterious prophecies of the means that are to revive it at an early future. We have shown how the Northern men who were always obstructing the Government at critical moments during the war, are now, as then, in the same faction. JEFF. DAVIS and JUBAL EARLY are for GREELEY now, just as Gen. DIX and SHERMAN and SHERIDAN are for GRANT. Let the Greeleyites say what they will about particular questions of rebel pensions and States rights and carpet-baggers and finance, the stubborn fact remains that the people augur sinister results from their possible success, and that this has been made clear at every turn. When the Federal troops lost a battle, gold went up and stocks went down. So it has been with every political encounter, the effect of which seemed hopeful for GREELEY. When the Federal troops won a battle, gold went down and stocks went up. And so, during the campaign, have like political mutations been followed by parallel results. This has been so uniform and so remarkable as, of itself, to warrant positive conclusions. The Wall-street barometer is a pretty trusty one, and no "fresh looks at the tables" can possibly upset its teachings. If we turn to the public journals we find the same lesson. The same pure and delicate metropolitan sheet that did its best to help the rebel cause is now doing its best to help GREELEY. Go through the whole country and, with few exceptions, you see a repetition of the same story; and the readers naturally reflect the opinions—or originate them—which are given forth by their favorite newspapers. The same portions of the old Democratic Party whom Mr. GREELEY used to call "drunkards, pimps, and cutthroats"—the men, we mean, of the Sixth Ward and corner-grocery stripe, are now all hot for the "Sage of Chappaqua." And so, too, all the old "Brick" Pomeroy and "Ben" Wood gang, the people who think the Express a "high toned" paper, and who used to prate about "bastiles," and maunder about States rights when the Government was in a life and death grapple with the rebellion, are now hoarse with yelling for GREELEY, and telling each other what a nice kind of President he would make.

It is impossible to mistake these things, and impossible to deny them. They mean, we repeat, that this is another fight for the Union. It is all very well for our opponents to say it is nothing of the sort. But when troops march into the field, with the same uniforms and the same standards, and blowing the same trumpets and exchanging the same watch-words, that we all knew so well in the four years after Sumter, we stick to our own opinion, and think that those whom Mr. LINCOLN used to call "the plain people" will stick to it, too. To them, everywhere, we now address ourselves, and say: You must come out in your strength next Tuesday, as your noble army did, and give this fresh treason against the country its death-blow forever. You must work on Tuesday from sunrise to sunset, heartily, incessantly, you, and all the friends and neighbors you can muster. Remember it is really for the good old flag. All its old enemies are marshaled against it. We are still too near the war to let them have even a show of success. We have crossed most of the stream, but there is an ugly bit of marsh and quagmire still, and the time to "swap horses" has not yet arrived. Let every Union man, every wife, mother, sister, who had a soldier in the war, work from this moment, then, in the good cause: and by next Wednesday morning there will be no more to be seen of the wretched hulk of Greeleyism than there was to be seen of the Alabama off Cherbourg, on that fine day in June, eight years ago, after her brief but unpleasant encounter with the Kearsarge.

A Good Judicial Nomination.

Our merchants are now about collecting their November dividends. Our Banks and Insurance Companies and Life Companies and Trust Associations are beginning to make up their books for the year. People with invested property are looking at their securities, and wondering what the interest from them will be during the coming year. One and all will find a new and heavy charge against their property in the shape of increased taxation, owing to the frauds of the Ring last year. Bank dividends are smaller, returns from Life and Fire Insurance are diminished, all securities in this City are of less value—because WILLIAM M. TWEED, SWEENY, CONNOLLY, INGERSOLL & Co. were to be permitted to indulge in marble stables and fast horses and magnificent villas, and great estates, stolen out of the public treasury. But it is not merely the rich who feel these frauds. Every man, woman and child in this City is paying now, in higher rents and increased taxes, for all the plastering and plumbing and furnishing which helped, for a few years past, to make up the robberies of the Ring. The twenty millions come out of all our hard-earned wages and salaries.

In considering how they will vote next Tuesday, it would be well for our citizens to remember these facts, and to ask, "Which one of the local candidates will be most likely to check frauds?" "Which one will be most committed to Reform?" If we recall the robberies which have made us all poorer, we shall see that there was one element which especially rendered them possible. No TWEED or SWEENY could have succeeded thus if it had not been for a corrupt Judiciary. A BARNARD and CARDOZO made a CONNOLLY or TWEED what they have been. Such gigantic swindling would never have been attempted had there been pure and incorruptible Judges on the Bench. These public robbers always knew that they held the Judges by their pockets; and that, if they were brought to bay, the Court-room would shelter them.

Far more important for any voter is his vote for Judge than for any other office. It is an unfortunate system which puts the appointment of the Judiciary in the hands of the constituencies. But as it is there, each citizen must do his duty conscientiously; and the upper Courts are as important as the lower. All should have pure men on the seats, which tradition and public weal require should be kept free from all contamination. We have spoken frequently of many of our Judicial nominations, but we desire, in the public interest, to especially commend one. We mean that of Mr. HOOPER C. VAN VORST, by the Committee of Seventy and the Republican Party, to the Superior Court. Mr. VAN VORST is one of those gentlemen whom this City needs in public life—a man of elevated character and fine culture—interested in education and all enterprises of humanity and philanthropy, with a sound judicial mind, and much experience as a lawyer. He has been one of the most active promoters of Municipal reform, and was President of the Reform organization of the Nineteenth Ward. In the Board of Education, his services as Commissioner have been most valuable. As Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, to which seat he was appointed in 1867, he distinguished himself by the clearness and impartiality of his decisions. He is an honest, conscientious Judge, and would protect the interests of our citizens and of justice as they should be protected. Let every voter remember that in voting for Judge VAN VORST, he helps to guard himself and the City against future frauds and rascalities, and to inaugurate "the rule of honest men."

The danger before us, next Tuesday, is too great confidence. Our merchants will stay at home, because they are sure GREELEY is to be beaten. But remember, we are not sure about any of our City nominations. We must work if we would succeed with them; and upon them depends much of our prosperity and comfort during the next few years.

The Last Meeting of the Canvass.

The Wednesday meetings at Cooper Institute were closed last evening. They have been in many respects noteworthy. Without recourse to any extraordinary means to collect a crowd, and with entire abstinence from fire-works, &c., these meetings have every week been attended by large and intelligent audiences; and they have been ably addressed by some of the best public men of the country. They have done great good to the Republican cause, and the moderation and good sense with which they have been conducted have been highly creditable to the State Committee. The meeting last evening was a very large one, the hall of the Union being packed to suffocation, and every available inch of standing-room occupied.

We ask all our readers' attention to the list of officers. It is the strongest ever made up for a political meeting in this City. Contrast it with the lists of officers of the Greeley meetings, and judge on which side the men most respected for character and ability in this community are to be found. Every calling contributes its most eminent members. Law, medicine, the clergy, and the Press are represented by distinguished names; and the mercantile class throughout the country will know the value of the long list of influential names included among the Vice-Presidents. There are too many to recite even the most prominent, here. Let every one read the list for himself.

The reception given to Mr. BOUTWELL was a very hearty one. He was loudly cheered when he rose to speak, and his clear and forcible address was listened to closely and frequently applauded. The Secretary made a plain, straightforward statement of his conception of Gen. GRANT'S character, a brief explanation of the objects contemplated in the Treasury policy, and a sharp criticism of Mr. GREELEY'S financial notions. He studiously refrained, not only from ad captandum appeals, in which he never indulges, but even from any attempt to arouse party feeling in his audience. His testimony concerning the President was simple, dignified, and conclusive. His analysis of Mr. GREELEY'S pet lunacies in finance was severe, but couched in perfectly courteous terms. Touching his statement of the Treasury policy, it was very plain that the audience understood and approved it. The Administration, according to Mr. BOUTWELL, had aimed to collect the taxes thoroughly, to reduce them as rapidly as possible, and to pay as much of the public debt as it could. It had collected the taxes so thoroughly that the same tax laws yielded forty-seven per cent. more under GRANT than under JOHNSON. It had reduced taxation by over one hundred and fifty millions a year. It had paid over three hundred and fifty millions of the debt. The record is one of simple honesty and common sense, and the audience greeted it in a way that showed how closely it conforms to the popular ideas. If there ever had been a chance of the Democracy capturing the Government under cover of Mr. GREELEY'S name, that gentleman's confused, shifting, uncertain theories of financial management would have made that chance of no avail.

Speaker BLAINE was received with even more feeling than Mr. BOUTWELL, and in a way which showed that the constant and base attacks on his character have not shaken the popular confidence in him. They have, in fact, only made him better known, and the thorough refutations of them have brought his solid qualities to the attention of the people. His address was cogent and argumentative. He summed up the really great issues of the canvass in a powerful manner, and appealed only to the reason and conscience of his hearers. His speech was a fitting conclusion to the long and valuable series of arguments and appeals made in these Wednesday evening meetings.

Facts to be Remembered.

On Jan. 1, 1869, the debt of the City and County of New-York amounted to $36,293,929. Today, the City and County debt exceeds one hundred millions of dollars. Increase in less than four years, sixty-four millions of dollars.

In 1869 the rate of taxation was $2 27 per $100; in 1872 it is $2 90 per $100. The two per cent. rate of 1871 was an egregious swindle, as it failed to provide for nine months' expenditures, and left a debt of over twelve millions of dollars to be added to the liabilities of the City.

The rate of 1869, had there been honest government in the interim, would have amply sufficed for our wants now. A small property-owner, therefore, who pays taxes on, say ten thousand dollars of real estate, has the satisfaction of paying this year sixty-three dollars to account of the stealings of the Tammany gang of office-holders This must be continued for several years to come, because our debt was trebled by three years of misrule, and we are merely paying interest on it, and can but very slowly pay it off.

Were our local obligations to be allowed to increase at the rate they did during the reign of Tammany, it would take less than thirty years to make the City and County debt equal to a mortgage of fifty per cent. on all the real estate of Manhattan Island. Long before this, of course, the City would be hopelessly bankrupt, its commerce gone, its industries transferred, and its property worthless.

For the sixty-four millions added to our debt, the Tammany Ring left us next to nothing. The Central Park was practically completed before 1869; money enough had been paid before then to build and furnish the new Court-house twice over: the expenditures on the new piers and docks were only begun; and the work on the City parks and the Croton Aqueduct could easily have been paid out of the current receipts from taxation.

Four millions is a very ample allowance to make for the value of all the permanent works left by Tammany in exchange for sixty-four millions of new permanent debt. Net result—sixty millions stolen, in addition to the sums filched out of assessments on property-owners and out of current taxation.

Of the above, about five millions of dollars were spent on wholly unnecessary public advertising, as a bribe to stop the mouth of the Press. Of this at least half a million went back into the pockets of the Ring through the medium of the Transcript, of which TWEED, SWEENY, and others, were owners.

The same corrupt organization which is responsible for these things, appeals again, through a new set of leaders, for a fresh chance to get its hand into the local Treasury, its nominee into the Governor's chair, and its tools into the Legislature.

Let the citizens of New-York take a fresh look at their tax-papers, and then say whether they can afford to risk another three years of Tammany rule.

The Sixth Congressional District.

We know that Dr. ADOLPHE G. DUNN, the Republican candidate for Congress against JAMES BROOKS, is an able man, with qualifications for the office far above those of most candidates. He ought to be elected by a decided majority over his opponent, who has misrepresented the district for years. BROOKS owes his seat in Congress solely to Tammany. Personally he has neither fitness for the place nor popularity. Tammany sent him and has kept him there, and has received in acknowledgment the utmost subserviency on all occasions and in all ways. In the long fight with Tammany, neither BROOKS nor his paper helped the people a particle. On the contrary, the charges and proofs of corruption were studiously suppressed in the Express, and to this day have never been given to its readers. What Tammany found in BROOKS worth buying, it is hard to see. The price it paid in the Congressional nomination was, however, of little account to it, for to Tammany's immediate plans it mattered very little who was in Congress or who was out of it. We may be sure that the bargain was satisfactory to BROOKS, or he would not have closed it. Doubtless he has made it pay, and there have been lobbyists in Washington who might tell how. It is to be hoped, however, that the time has come when the election of a Congressman in this District is not controlled by Tammany. It is certain that the honest people there have a chance of choosing an excellent representative in Dr. DUNN. We trust they will improve it.

Tammany.

Whatever may be the result of the election in this City on Tuesday next, it is reasonably certain that the nominees of Tammany Hall will be the last and lowest in the race. It may also be safely predicted that this is the last election in which any respectable candidate for office will deem it essential to his success, or desirable for his reputation, to have the indorsement of that political organization. If there is any association, combination or thing in this country that ought, above all things, to crave death and oblivion it is the "Order of St. Tammany." The very name of Tammany has become a stench in the nostrils of the whole American people. Any attempt to revive it, or "reform" it, or to perpetuate its existence in any shape, is the height of short-sightedness and folly. There is a strong inclination, we are aware, among some people, to prolong the life of a political party, organization, or name that has been great and powerful in the past. There were men who could not bear to see the old Whig Party lose its name and identity, and be heard of no more in the political arena. But they had the consolation of knowing that it had been a noble and a glorious party in its day, and that, if it had become palsied with too much conservatism in its old age, it would at least die full of honors, and leave behind it a bright and untarnished name.

Not so with Tammany. That organization has committed the unpardonable sin for which there is no reparation or atonement. It was never highly respectable, as the world goes; it was always rough, boisterous, and rowdyish—given to muscle and passion rather than to intellect and reason; but since it transferred its head-quarters to Fourteenth-street, it has made its new domicile a very den of thieves and robbers. The "fire-water" of the sachems has been turned into the fire of political debauchery and crime. The new edifice has become a haunted house, uninhabitable for any man or association of men who desire to escape the finger of scorn. Its walls echo with perjuries and blasphemies and the wrangling voices of highway robbers. Its cellars are full of blasted reputations, murdered characters, and dead politician's bones. Not all the money of corrupt railroad companies, nor all the forgiism of AUGUSTUS SCHELL, nor all the political craft of SAMUEL J. TILDEN will ever be able to restore the Wigwam to a reputable habitation, or make the name of Tammany anything but an object of loathing and curses with all honest people.

The last thing, and the only fit thing, that can be done with Tammany is to bequeath the name to posterity as a synonym for thievery and all forms of political rascality, and to transform the wigwam into a stable, or a circus for performances like that of the great "combination" which now has a renegade Republican for its figure-head.

The Coming Ox.

When, in the first days of the horse disease, it was proposed that oxen should be brought into the City to supply the place of the dead and dying horses, no one, probably, imagined that the proposal would be seriously adopted. Nevertheless, so great has been the interruption of business in consequence of the dearth of horses, that oxen have already made their appearance, chiefly in connection with market-wagons, while it is understood that large numbers of draymen have sent into the country in search of teams of oxen wherewith to resume their interrupted occupation. It is thus possible that, should the horse disease prevail for any length of time, the ox would become as familiar a feature of our streets as the horse has been; and it is by no means certain that he would not win as high a place in our respect and affection.

The ox is undoubtedly a slow and methodical beast. He lacks the fiery energy of the horse, and is ill-adapted to meet the views of the cabman or hearse driver of racing proclivities. The omnibus driver who wields the ox-goad instead of the horse-whip would find it difficult to instigate his team to the playful joke of carrying away the wheels of obnoxious carriages; and the wild butcher boy could not amuse himself with driving his two-wheeled ox-cart over the toes of near-sighted old gentlemen. The ox being, moreover, a prosaically sure-footed beast would fail to gratify that numerous part of the community whose apparent occupation it is to watch the struggles of horses who have fallen on the Broadway pavement. Certainly the ox would be a failure if he were expected to lend his aid to fast driving, or to any other recognized form of popular amusement. He has, however, certain well-understood virtues which might more than compensate for the shortcomings just imputed to him.

For example, he is the most placid and peaceful of beasts. Not even the malignant ingenuity of the small boy has yet devised a plan to irritate him into running away. Broadway might be crowded with the frequent ox, but the spectacle of a run-away team, now an every-day sight, would never be offered. The thoughtful ox, when tethered at the curbstone, and wrapt in meditation upon the meadows of his rural youth, might sometimes abstractedly lunch upon the brilliant skirt of a passing lady, or, dreamily tossing his huge head, hint his presence with unintentional horn to the lounging policeman; but in neither case would his conduct deserve indignant censure. His work would undoubtedly be performed with the utmost slowness and deliberation, but it would never be shirked under the weak pretense of "staggers," as is the reprehensible habit of the vicious horse, while his very slowness would recommend him to those express companies whose delight it is to delay as long as possible the delivery of trunks intrusted to their care. It is possible, too, that his habitual deliberation and persistent practice of wayside meditation might exert a wholesome influence upon our overworked business men, and lead them, by the force of example, into easier and healthier habits of life. The ox has undoubtedly been sadly unappreciated by our citizens, and inasmuch as to know him is to respect him, and to recognize his solid virtues may very possibly prove the first step to their imitation, it will perhaps be a substantial gain to the Metropolis should the ox take up his permanent residence among us.

MINOR TOPICS.

According to Mr. DICKENS, the counsels and instructions of a veteran criminal were necessary in order to make accomplished thieves of Fagin's youthful friends. In this City, the juvenile instinct for crime needs no instruction. The young New-York pickpocket would resent with scorn, the suggestion that he should enter a class such as Fagin had under his charge. He steals by the light of nature quite as skillfully as does the regularly-educated London thief. It should also be noticed, in comparing the efficiency of our juvenile criminal with that of the young thief of the British monarchy, that here, alone, has the small boy proved himself a capable and accomplished burglar. On Monday night, a burglar aged twelve, assisted by a confederate aged ten, broke open a store with the aid of a diminutive jimmy, and proceeded to confiscate property with much coolness and judgment. Let the despots of Europe point, if they can, to a similar instance of juvenile precocity among their down-trodden subjects.

Whenever a municipal election is at hand, the target companies appear in the glory of red shirts and portable calcium lights. It is perfectly well understood that the majority of these associations are made up of the lowest class of Democratic politicians, banded together in order to "strike" candidates for money, under the pretext of buying prizes for which to shoot. Of course it is to be expected that the target-shooters will get drunk, and engage in riot and robbery, such being their only idea of rational enjoyment. To what extent the target company that visited Hamilton Park on Monday was responsible for the disorder and crime that followed in their wake is not clear. It may be true that the thieves who followed the company to the entrance of the Park, and subsequently beat and robbed every passer-by, were as obnoxious to the company as they were to you, unless, indeed, they were among those who have occurred had not the drums of the target company called out the thieves of the entire district in search of prey.

The Tribune is now publishing a series of attacks on Attorney-General BARLOW, which are said to be written by DAVID DUDLEY FIELD The Tribune has distinguished itself during this campaign by deliberately forging Speaker BLAINE'S name to a document, by which it was made to appear that he had accepted bribes to an enormous amount; and it has also published numerous other libels, of almost equal atrocity, on other honorable men. The fact that these attacks upon Gen. BARLOW appear in such a sheet would alone render them undeserving of any attention. Moreover, the public, suspecting their author, fully comprehends their contemptible character. Gen. BARLOW need give himself no trouble to answer any pretended charges that either DAVID DUDLEY FIELD or the Tribune may bring against him.

Few people outside of Paris had any idea of the extent to which Minister WASHBURNE aided and protected Germans during the recent French and German war. From a statement recently made by him, it appears that he aided thirty thousand Germans to leave Paris and return to their native country, after the decree of the French Government driving all German residents out of the city. He subsequently protected three thousand destitute Germans, who had remained in the city during the perils and privations of the siege. More than this, he interposed and rescued from a violent death more than a hundred Germans who were arrested as spies by the Communists. A record such as this entitles Mr. WASHBURNE to the gratitude not only of the German race, but of all humane men, and it is pleasant to learn that Prince BISMARCK has warmly acknowledged the services of the fearless American Minister.

On Tuesday a gentleman was suddenly killed as he was passing a new building at the corner of Wall and Broad streets, by a large piece of timber, which fell from the roof and struck him on the head. That accidents like this do not occur daily in this City is a matter of wonder. When a new building is being raised, or an old one being repaired, no adequate protection is afforded to the public. Instead of putting a roofed gallery on the sidewalk, as is done in every European city, people are permitted to pass directly under heavy beams and blocks of stone suspended in the air, and are saved from death or maiming only by the strength of the rope in use, or the vigilance of the workmen. The latter are often inexcusably careless and reckless, and we shall probably have a series of accidents like that of yesterday, until builders are strictly compelled to carry on their work with more regard to human life.

The Yankee, especially he of the Connecticut variety, is unquestionably an extremely ingenious person, and has given to the world a large number of exceedingly useful inventions. His last effort is, perhaps, the most ingenious of all his inventions, though there may be some doubt as to its practical usefulness. The naked condition of our trees during the Winter months is by no means attractive, and it is, therefore, a benevolent idea of a particularly benevolent Connecticut person, to prevent the falling of leaves by the artificial warming of the trees. He asserts that a system of steam pipes twining among the roots of shade trees, and kept hot by steam from an ordinary furnace boiler, will have the effect of persuading the trees that the cold of December is merely a delusion, and that it would, therefore, be folly to lay aside their Summer foliage. It is not known that this plan has been tested by actual experiment, and it is possible that the average trees may decline to be deceived by the device of artificial warming.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Horace Greeley.

The wife of Mr. Horace Greeley died in this City yesterday morning, at the residence of Mr. Alvin J. Johnson, No. 323 West Fifty-seventh-street. The immediate cause of death was a very severe attack of lung disease, a complaint which had caused her much continued suffering for nearly twenty years. Mrs. Greeley's maiden name was Mary Young Cheney, and she was born at Litchfield, Conn., in the year 1814. Enjoying unusual educational advantages, Miss Cheney became a school-teacher of rare abilities. Becoming an ardent believer in the hygienic teachings of Dr. Graham, the famous dietist, she frequented the Graham House Hotel, in this City, and there made the acquaintance of her future husband. In the beginning of 1836 she accepted an engagement as teacher in Warrenton, N. C., and married Mr. Greeley at that place in July of the same year.

During her last illness, Mrs. Greeley was attended by Mr. Greeley and her two daughters, the Misses Ida and Gabrielle. From the first it was feared that the attack would have a fatal tendency, and her death was anticipated this week as inevitable, so that her friends were fully resigned to the worst. The funeral will take place in Dr. Chapin's Church, on Friday, at the hour of noon, and will be quite private. The body will be conveyed to Green-Wood and buried there in the modest vault which belongs to the family. Her loss will be deeply felt by her family and a large circle of friends.

ITALIAN OPERA—MME. LUCCA IN "LA FAVORITA."

A welcome change was made last night at the Academy by the production of Donizetti's "Favorita." The performances of opera have been a trifle ragged of late, and the representation named was the more acceptable for being smooth and correct, in an uncommon degree. The fire and dramatic force of Mme. Lucca's Leonora deserve all the strong praise they have received at competent hands abroad. It is certainly one of the lady's best characters. Her audience was with her last night from the outset. Twice called before the curtain at the end of the first act, the compliment was repeated again and again during the rest of the performance, and the enthusiasm thus indicated was assuredly spontaneous. Parts that call for depth of feeling, for the abandon of passionate emotion, are the ones perhaps best suited to Madame Lucca's abilities, excellent as she is in the homelier range that on the English stage would pertain to that we call the domestic drama. Her efforts on this hearing were strengthened by vocal conditions of an auspicious nature, and in all respects the impersonation of Leonora was thus made delightful to the crowded audience. Signor Abrugnedo was also in better voice than heretofore, and sang to the real satisfaction of his public. Certain passages have been rendered here to better advantage, no doubt, yet, on the whole, the gentleman's Fernando was an effort the symmetry and completeness of which deserve full recognition, and are not easily to be surpassed. The Alphonso of Signor Sparapani was very creditable, and was honored with no little applause; and the Balthasar of Signor Coulon was dignified and effective. The concerted pieces were given with considerable care, and altogether this performance of "La Favorita" was an advance on the majority of representations furnished by the present company. The opera will bear repetition, and we can conscientiously recommend the public to listen, in hearing it, to an entertainment of genuine merit, not on the part of the admirable artist sustaining the chief character alone, but in the surrounding and subordinate figures and accessories. Were all the work given by this troupe as praiseworthy as that of last night, criticism would have little to except to, and the manager and public would be equally well satisfied.

ABOUT CANDIDATES.

Look Out for Your Congressmen and Assemblymen.

Men Who Ought to be Left at Home.

Why They Should Remain in Retirement.

Candidates Who Ought to be Elected.

Remember, Election Day is a Legal Holiday.

Look Out for Your Congressmen and Assemblymen.

It is most important that men like James Brooks and De Witt C. Littlejohn should be shut out from the next Congress and State Legislature. Dr. Dunn is running against James Brooks, and can beat him if our Republican friends will do their duty. Mr. Fort is Littlejohn's antagonist, and is an honest man—which Littlejohn is not. The latter has always been a supple tool of Tammany—and has further distinguished himself by the basest treachery to all who have lent him a helping hand. If sent to the Assembly, Littlejohn will inevitably "sell out" his constituents whenever he gets a chance, and laugh at them afterward.

Husted and Alvord are also candidates for the Assembly, and ought to be sent home. Let us secure a good representative body, and not be saddled with the men who ruined all reform measures last session.

Michael Connolly, Another "Reformer."

The voters of the Ninth Congressional District can scarcely need to be told that Mike Connolly, "the Big Judge," in office and out, as a citizen and a judicial officer, has given his sympathy and countenance and association and aid to that class of the community who contemn law and make light of morals, and who has grown strong, if he is strong, by an aggregation of constituencies who sympathize with his groveling political views and actions. He has been intrusted with the duties of arraigning criminals. He has so exercised that function that the offender has not feared him, but the Policeman and the agent of the law has often felt the weight of his denunciation, and trembled under his threats. Ignorant himself to a degree that is amazing, he has reversed the maxim of the common law, that "ignorance excuseth no man," and translated it so that it reads in his vocabulary, "ignorance excuseth all manner of offenses." If the voting population of this Congressional district desire to be represented by a person of such a grade, the opportunity presents itself this Fall.

John Hardy, a Cadidate for Congress.

In response to the call of President Lincoln for troops to put down the rebellion, just then inaugurated by the first act—firing upon Sumter—the Governor of the State of New-York, Hon. E. D. Morgan, wrote a patriotic message recommending a compliance with the call. The Committee of the House of Assembly reported a bill, the provisions of which were intended to supply the quota of troops due from this State to the Federal Union. The bill was passed rapidly through the preliminary stages of legislation, and on the 15th of April, 1861, it became a law, by 102 Union votes to 6 Copperhead secession votes. The six votes in opposition to this patriotic measure were Cozans, Hardy, Kenny, Varian, Walsh and Young. And this Mr. John Hardy is the identical person who has enjoyed the confidence of Tammany, been their fostered pet in Municipal office, was conspicuous as a sympathizer in the riot of July, 1863—in fact, the emissary of the mob, and a spokesman in its interest. This Mr. John Hardy now appeals to the voters of the Ninth Congressional District to intrust him with high official functions in the same Government which, in 1861, he was not only unwilling to defend, but was not willing to have defended. Persons who, with this record before them, vote for Mr. John Hardy, will be subjected to the suspicion that their action is dictated by sympathetic approval of his extraordinary career.

New-York City Congressmen.

Dr. Dunn in the Sixth, John D. Lawson in the Eighth, D. B. Mellish in the Ninth, and Wm. A. Darling in the Tenth Congressional Districts are candidates that every honest man should vote for. Compare them with Fernando Wood, "Big Judge" Connolly, John Hardy, James Brooks, and it is difficult to see how the decent people of the City will be content to accept the latter rather than the former.

Election Day.

Do not forget that Tuesday next will be a legal holiday, and that the polls open at 6 A. M. and close at 4 P. M. It is important that every friend of reform should take the trouble to vote—every vote is of value to us. In the City, vote for all the candidates nominated by the Committee of Seventy.

Not Withdrawn.

Dr. Adolph G. Dunn, the Republican candidate for Congress in the Sixth District against James Brooks, has not withdrawn, as has been erroneously stated. Dr. Dunn proposes to remain a candidate, and he should be warmly supported on Tuesday by all who desire to see the Sixth District worthily represented in the next Congress.

The Third and Fourth Congressional Districts.

In the Third District, Gen. Woodford is as sure of an election as any man can be before the votes are polled; but his friends owe it to him and to the country to give him in Congress the help which only a strong constituency can give. He will make a useful and creditable member. In the Fourth District, Gen. Cooke ought to be elected. He is an upright man, in whom the people of Brooklyn have confidence. If the full vote is brought out, he will be returned.

Tardy Repentance.

The Tribune yesterday remarked that "the game of announcing people as speakers of political meetings on the strength of their having been invited to speak, and in defiance of the fact that they are known not to be in sympathy with the object of the meetings, is beginning again." So it appears that Mr. Cochrane's Committee has decided to return to the plan on which the first Greeley meeting in this City was engineered, when, as will be remembered, Carl Schurs and other prominent Liberals, who never had any intention of being present, were announced as speakers. Indeed, the ingenious Tribune frankly asserts that its advertising columns "give some striking illustrations of it"—meaning by "it" the "game" of falsely announcing people as speakers. In the columns in question a long list of Liberal speakers is presented, numbers of whom have not the least intention of appearing at the meetings where the Tribune assures its readers they will speak.

The Professor at His Old Tricks Again.

To tell preposterous falsehoods and to then immediately proceed to show their falsity, is the latest folly of the Tribune. For example, it said on Wednesday that "when the notorious maladministration of the New-York Custom-house by his (Cameron's) and Tweed's favorite, Murphy, became unendurable to the merchants of New-York, and the President was forced to dismiss him—the only case during his Administration wherein he has paid even the slightest respect to public opinion—he not only allowed Murphy to name his successor, but insulted and defied the public by sending him an open letter strongly approving his course."

It is untrue that Mr. Murphy was unendurable to the merchants of New-York, for the most eminent of them certified that under his administration the Custom-house had been managed better than it ever had been before. It is also untrue that Mr. Murphy was dismissed; the fact being that he resigned. When the Tribune goes on to say that the President publicly and strongly approved Mr. Murphy's course, it shows the falsity of the pretense that he was removed, and when it asserts that the President "removed" him out of "respect to public opinion," it nullifies its charge that in so removing him the President "insulted and defied the public."

Rumored Resignation of the Tammany Judiciary Candidates.

It was generally conceded in political circles yesterday that the Tammany candidates for Judges of the Supreme and Superior Courts, City Judge, District-Attorney and Coroner would resign their nominations. A reporter of the TIMES called upon several of the nominees last night, but failed to learn anything definite. Judges Bedford and Leonard pronounced it untrue, though it is generally believed to be true by many.

Mass-Meeting to Ratify the Nomination of David S. Mellish for Congress.

Over 1,500 persons assembled, last night, in Neumann's Hall, No. 475 Ninth-avenue, to ratify the nomination for Congress of David B. Mellish. The enthusiasm exhibited throughout was unbounded. The President, Benjamin K. Phelps, Esq., occupied the chair, and delivered a stirring speech, during which he highly eulogized Mr. Mellish, and challenged any man to point out one stain in his record. Mr. Robert Sewell spoke of the services rendered the country by the Republican Party in freeing four millions of human beings. He said that the people could not so soon forget its record, and that Horace Greeley would be the worst defeated man who ever aspired for the Presidency.

Dr. Adolph G. Dunn spoke in German, urging his countrymen to vote the reform ticket headed by Havemeyer, and for the Republican, State, and National nominees. Col. B. T. Morgan and others followed in able speeches, after which the meeting dispersed, with cheers for all the Republican and Reform nominees.

Reception to Edmund Yates by the Faust Club, Brooklyn.

On Tuesday evening the members of the Faust Club, in Brooklyn, assembled in their handsome Club-house, on Remsen-street, to do honor to Mr. Edmund Yates, the English novelest and lecturer. Among those present were Hon. S. B. Chittenden, Hon. Stewart L. Woodford, Hon. S. S. Cox, Hon. J. M. Van Cott, Major General Slocum, Hon. J. S. T. Stranahan, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Rev. Father O'Reilly, Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, Rev. A. P. Putnam, Mr. Wm. Hart, and Mr. R. L. Edwards. Mr. Yates reached the Club-house about 10 o'clock, after having delivered his lecture on "Princes of the Pen." He was greeted with warmth, and recognized among the gentlemen present several whom he had met soon after his arrival here. Mr. Thos. Kinsella introduced Mr. Yates to the members of the Faust Club collectively, and then formally welcomed their guest in a neat speech as a "Prince of and an Ambassador of the Princes of the Pen." Alluding to the injustice English authors suffer from American publishers, he said the resistance to an international copyright is yielding to the feeling that we cannot longer afford to be dishonest in this particular, as we are too rich in literary promise. Mr. Kinsella concluded with some pleasant allusions to the ferocity of the Presidential contest.

Mr. Yates replied in an exceedingly happy vein, alluding in complimentary terms to the oratory of the President of the Club, and of Mr. Beecher. He had pondered over the name of the Club as having great possibilities for hidden meaning beyond his comprehension, and it occurred to him that, from their manner of harmonising, they had taken the name to recall the time upon earth when good-fellowship restored amiable middle-aged or old men to their pristine youth and vigor. If such were the signification, and that the purpose, he invited them to try it upon him.

Rev. Mr. Beecher, Rev. Mr. Talmage, Mr. Cox, Rev. Mr. Putnam, and Mr. Woodford were called upon to speak, and a series of short and witty speeches followed. Frequent references were made to the national facility in speech-making, and Mr. Woodford, in order to remove a misapprehension which might find lodgment in the mind of Mr. Yates, that an American could not avoid making a speech, said that we had found one who could, and at once made him President of the United States. [Applause and laughter.]

After a musical treat, contributed by some of the artists of the Italian Opera and one or the members of the Club, and the reading of letters of regret from several prominent gentlemen, the guest took his departure about midnight, and the pleasant and brilliant entertainment terminated.

CRUELTY ON WARD'S ISLAND.

Supposed Death of a Lunatic from Ill Treatment—An Inquest to be Held Today.

Lewis C. Samuels, a lunatic confined in the hospital of Ward's Island, died on the night of Monday last under painful and peculiar circumstances. The deceased is described in the books of the hospital as an Englishman, aged thirty-two years, and a commercial traveller by occupation. He entered the hospital on the 13th of August last, and enjoyed excellent physical health until within a week of his death, when he was seized with a severe attack of diarrhea, which caused great prostration. However, on Saturday last, when Dr. Echeverria, who had attended him since his admittance to the hospital, visited him, he found that his physical condition had much improved, and that even his mental condition gave marked indications of a change for the better. On Sunday morning, at 8 A. M., the doctor again visited him, and found him utterly prostrated, his body being quite blue and chilled. The unfortunate man complained that his attendant, one McDonald, had, at 6 o'clock that morning, forced him into a cold bath, despite his energetic protests. The doctor taxed McDonald with this act of cruelty, and he did not deny the charge. Stimulants were then given to the patient, and the attendant was severely reprimanded. On Monday morning Dr. Echeverria again visited his patient, and found him locked up in a small room. He observed the poor fellow's condition to be much worse, and again he heard complaints of the cruelty of the attendant McDonald. This time the lunatic charged his attendant with having beaten him severely on the knees, on the stomach, and in the face. Upon these portions of the man's body the doctor found marks and contusions which fully verified the patient's statement. On Monday night, at about 12 P. M. the sufferer expired, and the doctor when called in refused to give a certificate of death, but insisted upon holding a coroner's inquest. The man McDonald was recently appointed to succeed Farrell, lately discharged for cruelty, and already has been before the Board of Commissioners charged with cruelly treating a patient named Cassidy. Yesterday Gen. Bowen, a member of the Commission, visited the Island, and heard the above details from Dr. Echeverria. An investigation will shortly take place in reference to this matter, and other abuses and irregularities which are of daily occurrence in the Lunatic Hospital of Ward's Island. Today Dr. Cushman, Deputy Coroner, will hold an inquest upon the body of Samuels in the hospital, where it now lies.

The Congressmen at Large.

Inasmuch as the Election law of 1872 for the City and County of New-York requires that all the officers to be voted for in which all the voters alike participate (except in certain cases designated) shall be upon one ballot, which shall be indorsed "General—Number Two," it is hereby mutually understood and recommended that the candidates for Representative in Congress at large be printed in the City and County of New-York upon the tickets indorsed "General—Number Two," and not upon the ballot indorsed "Congress," as in the other counties of the State.

Mr. Brentano, No. 33 Union-square, has received by the Java his usual copious supply of English periodicals. Among the weeklies the Illustrated London News appears with some very fine pictures and a colored supplement of highly artistic finish. The Graphic is up to its usual standard of excellence; Punch has some first-rate cartoons, and the Saturday Review, Spectator, Nature, the Academy, &c., have all their accustomed standard of merit.

The Horse Epidemic.

Eighteen thousand sick horses in New-York—8,000 in Brooklyn—3,000 in Jersey City—boats and produce upon the canals at a standstill—men carting merchandise through our cities—street railroads and omnibuses unable to move—the Government stopping the importation of horses from Canada—are a part of the evidences of the terror and loss already occasioned by this terrible disease, and its ravages seem to have just commenced.

The immediate treatment of the disease, both to restore horses already afflicted, and to prevent others from taking it is what every one desires to know.

While the air is surcharged with this endemic malaria animals must not be overworked. They must be fed soft food—like bran-mash, carrots, and salted hay—not allowed to drink cold water—must be well blanketted, kept warm and have plenty of clean bedding. Those which are sick, in addition to the above should be given warm flax-seed tea, Muriate of Ammonia, and Belladonna or Aconite, and Sweet Spirits of Nitre—the nostrils and eyes kept clean with a soft sponge well rinsed in warm water, and the windpipe, throat, chest, belly, and legs, bathed and wrapped in some penetrating emollient. And for this nothing seems to be so well adapted as Centaur Liniment. This article is very penetrating—is quickly absorbed by the system, and appears to act alike upon the glands, muscles, and lungs. It is a certain preventive, and superior to Opodeldoc, Turpentine, or Capsicum. Well horses treated as above will not take the disease in either of its three forms—Catarrhal—Rheumatic and Gastro-Erysipelatous, all termed Epizootic Influenza. Unless something be immediately and effectively done to avert this terrible malady, the national industries will be paralyzed, and a financial panic ensue.—Tribune.

St. Louis Custom-House and Government Building.

The bids for the stone contract for the Government edifice at St. Louis were opened Saturday, as was stated in a telegram, and the principal competitors were the owners of a stone from the Ohio River and those of the St. Genevieve sandstone quarry near St. Louis. The reports from St. Louis and other places where the St. Genevieve stone is largely used are unanimous as to its being the best sandstone deposit in the country, being uniform in texture and color, and of great durability. The bid for this stone was thirty per cent. under its competitors, and would thus save the Government about $150,000, besides furnishing a stone, equal, if not superior, to any in the country. We hope therefore, that it will be accepted.—Cleveland Herald.

The Willcox & Gibbs Sewing-machine Company held their third special sale in New-York of double-thread sewing-machines, yesterday, at No. 722 Broadway, Mr. Daniel Matthews selling. The goods offered comprised a very large collection of all the leading kinds of lock-stitch and other double-thread sewing-machines, which have been taken in exchange by the Company in New-York and vicinity during the past three months, as part payment for the Willcox & Gibbs machine. There were, of course, none of this last class of machines offered, the object of the sale being to dispose of the constantly growing accumulation of double-thread machines in the hands of the Willcox & Gibbs Company, by whom they continue to be received at a fraction of their original cost from parties who desire to exchange them for the Willcox & Gibbs machine.

The machines sold were over seven hundred in number, and occupied the entire first floor and basement of the extensive sales-rooms. They were arranged in convenient lots, and in most cases were sold separately, with the option to the purchaser of taking one or more machines in the lot at the price. The catalogue comprised a very large number of Wheeler & Wilson, and also a good proportion of Singer, Grover & Baker, Howe, Weed, Florence, and other double-thread machines. The collection was a very fine one, all the machines having the appearance of being in good condition, many being evidently almost new. They were in every case in the same condition as when first received from the customer.

The attendance at the sale was very large, comprising not only dealers, but to a considerable extent the public, this being evidently a first-rate opportunity to obtain good second-hand, double-thread machines cheap. A large number Wheeler & Wilson averaged from $3 50 to $15 50; Elna, $3 50 to $6 50; Empire and Florence, ditto; Howe and Elliptic, $3 50 to $14; Domestic, $5 75; Weed & Davis, $3 to $9; Grover & Baker, $3 to $15; Singer, $4 to $20, and others in proportion. A few choice cabinets, &c., realised higher figures.

The sale was only partially concluded yesterday, and will be resumed this (Thursday) morning, at 10½.—Advertisement.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 30—P. M.

The Cable news from London today continues favorable to easier money in that market, and a further rise in the English and American funds. The Erie stock is also quoted higher, and the Cotton trade at Liverpool strong. The advance in U. S. 5-20s since yesterday is ¾@⅞ ₱ cent., which quotation caused the offerings here to the Sinking Funds to be very small, $868,000, and most of these rather above the price of gold.

In Money affairs the Stock Brokers are more generally paying full 7 ₱ cent. today than usual of late, and the demand is called active, although not of a pressing nature. The change in the market has been a partial check upon the speculation at the Exchange Board in the New-York and Western Roads, and the Miscellaneous Stocks, like Pacific Mail and Western Telegraph. The feeling was quite strong on the opening of business this morning, especially on Lake Shore, North-west and Pacific Mail, but prices soon relapsed into dullness, and only a moderate business, as compared with recent activity, was accomplished. In the Afternoon the speculation was dull, and on most Stocks indifferent or spiritless; but the fluctuations in prices were not very important, and at 4 o'clock P. M., when the Exchange closes, the following quotations were made as compared with Tuesday night. The sales of Gold fell this morning to 112¼@112⅜ ₱ cent. on the Cable advices of easier Money in London, and Exchange ruled barely steady at 108⅛@108⅜ ₱ cent.

There was a decidedly weak feeling at the Exchange Board between 3 and 4 o'clock P. M., and a general break in prices, from which there was little or no recovery to the close of business. The fluctuations in North-west Stock, 83½@78⅜ ₱ cent., were particularly marked today.

The break in the North-west speculation, so recently carried up from 72½@83½ ₱ cent., this afternoon, is ascribed to a resolution of the Board of Managers to issue $10,000,000 Convertible Bonds, in the discretion of the Executive Committee. The objects of this increase of Capital have not yet been officially explained.

The New-York Central Board of Directors have authorized a general Mortgage, bearing 6 ₱ cent., for $40,000,000, to provide for existing debt, about $15,000,000, and to construct a third rail from New-York to Buffalo.

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

NOVEMBER INVESTMENTS.

To those who have funds to invest in large or small amounts, or who wish to increase their income from means already invested in other less profitable securities, we recommend, after full investigation, the Seven-Thirty Gold Bonds of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. gold interest, (equal now to eight and a quarter currency,) and sold at par, they yield an income considerably more than one-third greater than United States five-twenties. They are Coupon and Registered, the lowest denomination being $100, the highest $10,000.

Nearly one-third of the Main Line of the Road will be completed and in operation, with a large business, the present season. All the property and rights of the Company, including a most valuable Land Grant, averaging about 23,000 acres per mile of road, are pledged as security for the first mortgage bonds now offered.

All marketable stocks and bonds are received in exchange at current prices. Descriptive pamphlets and maps, showing Route of Road, Connections, Tributary Country, &c., will be furnished on application.

We deal in GOVERNMENT BONDS, and in the following FIRST-CLASS RAILROAD SECURITIES, which we can recommend with confidence, from a thorough knowledge of their character and value, viz.:

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO BONDS, six per cent., gold. Denominations $100, $500 and $1,000. Interest May and November.

CENTRAL PACIFIC BONDS, six per cent., gold. Denomination $1,000 each. Interest January and July.

WESTERN PACIFIC BONDS, six per cent., gold, Denomination $1,000 each. Interest January and July.

Owing to the present high rate of interest, and consequent dullness in American Securities in Europe, and the demand for money here to move the crops, the present is a favorable time to make investments in these favorite Securities, as they can just now, for the above reasons, be purchased at less than their usual market prices, and a considerable advance is reasonably certain.

Full information furnished upon application at our office, in person or by mail.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ROUNDABOUT RAMBLES; THE LANDS OF FACT AND FICTION. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. New-York: SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & CO. 1872.

This is one of the best books for boys we have seen for a long time. Mr. Stockton has evidently set to work to produce a volume which would be interesting to all young people, and the result is that every page is worth reading. The contents are exceedingly varied, and although the work is mainly intended for the young, it will be found quite capable of providing amusement for the leisure hours of others more advanced in life. We took it up for the purpose of glancing through its pages, and found that we were reading steadily on; and, in truth, the book is far more interesting than many of much greater pretensions. Mr. Stockton may be honestly congratulated on the execution of his task. He evidently knows how to engage the attention of the young. The illustrations are numerous and good, and altogether, we scarcely expect to see a better book produced this Christmas, although no doubt we shall have many more showy ones.

THE HUMAN RACE. By LOUIS FIGUIER. New-York: D. APPLETON & CO. 1872.

M. Figuier is an industrious compiler, and he has now collected a great deal of information concerning the different races of mankind which inhabit the earth. He has drawn chiefly upon others for his facts, and we cannot say that in every case he has done well. But the book is well enough in its way, and may be read with interest by the general reader. The publishers have done wonders for it—the type and paper are both excellent, and the illustrations almost prodigal. There are eight fine chromo lithographs, and 243 engravings on wood. The volume is, consequently, one of the most attractive recently issued by the Messrs. Appleton.

AGNES HOPETOUN'S SCHOOLS AND HOLIDAYS. THE EXPERIENCES OF A LITTLE GIRL. By MRS. OLIPHANT. MACMILLAN & CO. 1872.

A charming story for children. We need not remind our readers how well qualified Mrs. Oliphant is to relate a narrative which shall enchain the attention of young and old. This little volume is excellent in the moral it inculcates as well as in the incidents upon which it is based. It is a book which every mother would be glad to have her children read.

THE BATTLE OF THE GAUGES RENEWED. By ROBERT F. FAIRLIE. London: EFFINGHAM WILSON.

In reply to a review made by Hon. Silas Seymour, on the report of Gen. G. P. Buell, Chief Engineer of the Texas Pacific Railroad, who advocated the adoption by that road of the three foot six-inch gauge, Mr. Fairlie has written an exhaustive argument on the comparative merits of the broad and narrow gauges, favoring, of course, the latter side of the question. Mr. Fairlie has presented the many advantages possessed by the narrow-gauge roads with great clearness and force. It is a subject upon which he is rightly enthusiastic, and thus it is not strange that he carries his conclusions further than others would care to do. Fully believing that on all short lines, or long routes through sparsely-settled districts, the narrow-gauge road can be used to great advantage, we are inclined to confess that even after reading Mr. Fairlie's able defense, we cannot admit that a three-foot gauge might be wisely substituted for those now employed by the Erie and Central Railroads. It would, indeed, be decidedly adventurous to construct a transcontinental road on this principle. We are developing a system of passenger-car building very different from this theory of railroads. Our Pullman cars and the like are every day becoming larger and heavier; and with this desire for airy, comfortable accommodations on the main routes, passengers would find it difficult to be satisfied with the further confinement of person to which these roads would necessarily subject them. In all freight lines, such as the one now proposed by the Central Railroad, we should suppose that the change might be highly advantageous. As a treatise on the subject, Mr. Fairlie's work is a very thorough one, and we cordially recommend it to all interested persons.

CATALOGUE OF THE GRADUATES AND OFFICERS OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK. July, 1872. Published by the Alumni Association.

This publication is the fruit of an excellent idea, and represents a praiseworthy effort to gather particulars concerning the large body of graduates—over 3,000 in number—who have gone into professional life from this Medical College since its foundation in 1841. The destruction of the records of the institution by the fire which destroyed the College building in 1866, has made the preparation of the work a task of great difficulty. The work is an octavo volume of 113 pages, and has been edited with care and ability by Dr. Charles Inslee Pardee, the present Secretary of the Association, and includes a list of the officers of the Alumni Association, the constitution, a history of the Medical Department of the University, a list of the officers of the College since its formation the names of all the Alumni, and, so far as obtainable, their present addresses and professional records.

—The Young Folks' History of England. (Boston: LEE & SHEPARD.) A good and sensible compilation by Ysa Craig-Knox. The facts are told in an interesting manner, although briefly—the events of the American war of Independence, for instance, being condensed into less than two pages. Brevity, however, is one of the aims of the book, and the author's general design has been successfully accomplished.

—The Prairie—(APPLETON & CO.) Another volume in the new illustrated edition of Cooper's novels. Like the preceding ones, it is well illustrated, and will be popular with travelers and railway readers.

Another Gift by Mr. W. W. Corcoran.

From the Washington Republican, Oct. 29.

We understand that the Board of Trustees and Overseers of the Columbian College, in this city, determined at a recent meeting to take immediate steps for the increase of its permanent endowment. Mr. W. W. Corcoran is President of the Board, and has most strikingly evinced his interest in this movement by informing Dr. Welling, the President of the College, that he purposes to contribute to its permanent funds the proceeds resulting from the sale of a very valuable tract of land belonging to him in the immediate vicinity of Washington. This tract of land, commonly known as "Trinidad," is situated on the eastern boundary of Washington, and embraces more than 160 acres. The spirit of improvement now taking such rapid strides among us has already reached this property, which, owing to the felicity of its position and other advantages, is estimated by competent judges to be worth not less than $250,000. The entire avails of this tract, when it shall be sold, will be generously turned over by Mr. Corcoran to the permanent endowment of the Columbian College.

France and Italy.

The policy of the Italian Government toward France is thus explained by the Ministerial paper, the Opinione: "If our clerical papers could be believed, we are on the eve of serious complications with France, and our relations with that Power are daily becoming more strained. This error seems to arise from the circumstance that the Ultramontanes only read Legitimist papers, and think that these represent the opinion of all Frenchmen. But the very reverse is the truth. Thiers and his Ministers, with the majority of the the French people, prevent the majority in the Assembly at Versailles from venting their spite upon Italy. Whenever any difference of opinion arises between the French and Italian Governments, these Deputies busily fan the flame, and would be glad to kindle a war between the two countries. But Thiers has always silenced them, which he would never have been able to do if they had the French nation at their back. Even if all Frenchmen shared the feelings of the Ultramontanes and the Legitimists, Italy would not be obliged to alter her policy, for she has the other States of Europe on her side. At present it is chiefly on commercial questions that we do not agree with France; but England, Belgium, and Austria have exactly the same opinions on this subject as ours, and thus her we join these Powers in a common unwise.her we join these Powers in a common understanding or negotiate with France alone, these questions would in any case be settled peacefully." The French may also differ from us on religious subjects, and indeed the Ultramontanes and Legitimists attack us in the most violent manner on account of the law on religious corporations. But the Powers know how to distinguish internal from international questions, and have good reasons for not interfering in the affairs of other States. If France has any claims to make with regard to Roman institutions which she has founded, they will be examined and duly allowed if we find them valid, just as we should do with the claims of any other country. But in this matter also a peaceful arrangement will be arrived at; the Ultramontanes and Legitimists will not have the satisfaction of setting France and Italy by the ears. We do not fear a war either now or in future. . . The Power which should now provoke a war would have all the other Powers against it. Not only do we not desire a war with France, but we strive to maintain the most friendly relations with her; and we therefore beg the Liberal Italian papers, on the one hand, not to make France responsible for the language of the Ultramontanes and Legitimists, while, on the other we protest against the provoking language used toward France by our clericals."

NEWPORT.

The Chevalier De Ternay. Monumental Slab at "Old Trinity."

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEWPORT, R. I., Saturday, Oct. 26, 1872.

Our numerous Summer visitors in New-York will, no doubt, be pleased as well as interested, and especially that portion of them who are accustomed to worship at "Old Trinity Church," to learn the following: The monumental slab erected to the memory of Chevalier de Ternay, who died in this city soon after his arrival, and who was buried with imposing military honors, has been removed. This slab has remained in the churchyard for nearly a century, but during the present week it has been taken up and placed in the vestibule on the west side of the church. This step has been taken by the church society at the solicitation and expense of the Marquis de Noailles, the French Minister, who has resided here during the past season. A neat but substantial block of granite, suitably inscribed, will mark its last resting-place in the burial-yard of the church.

Chevalier de Ternay arrived in this city on the 10th day of August, 1780, in command of a French fleet of seven ships and five frigates, with a large number of transports and an army of six thousand, under the command of Count de Rochambeau. J. G.

RELIGION IN FRANCE.

Views of M. de Pressense.

In the meeting of the Congregational Union, at Nottingham, on Oct. 17, Dr. Pressensé delivered an animated address, in the French language, on "The State of Religion in France." It was afterward translated to the meeting by Rev. R. Ashton, Jr. In considering, said Dr. Pressensé, the state of religion in France, he should have to leave out all reference to politics. The wounds of his bleeding country needed probing with a most delicate hand. He was compelled to say that Protestantism, as a State religion, had not honored religion generally in the eyes of his countrymen by recent events. The state of things might be thus described: The dominant religion was growing more and more hostile to liberty, and, as a natural consequence, liberty was becoming more and more irreligious. But the predominance of Romanism should not be looked on as a fatality of their race. Let them not forget the glorious French Reformation in the sixteenth century, which might be termed the chivalry of the Reformation, or the partial reformation of the seventeenth century in connection with Pascal and the Port Royal. If that last movement had not been crushed, France would not now be where she was. But France rejected both reformations. Matters grew worse, and on the 18th of July, 1870, the country appeared to consummate its idolatry in the acceptance of the dogma of Infallibility. Before that time there was a liberal party in the Church of Rome in France, but that party, regarded as a whole, had bowed its head to the idol of the Vatican. Romanism was descending lower and lower, and was trying to prevent the country from accepting liberty; while, on the other hand, it was drawing crowds to La Salette and Lourdes, cramming their minds with apocryphal miracles. In the meantime, as he had said, democracy was increasingly forsaking religion, which it confounded with Romanism. The people in the large towns were skeptical, and knew little or nothing to naturalize that term among us. In the excesses of the Commune they had seen what political atheism was. In the schools and the learned classes they had a cultivated infidelity. They had M. Renan and others, and this polished skepticism had descended to the streets, and they had seen it roaring in wine and blood. But between these two extremes there was a large number of religious souls in France waiting for better times, which might not be long delayed. But what were their duties? First, they should be men of true liberty. He ought to say that the religion of servitude was not the religion of Christ. Moreover, friends of Christianity everywhere ought to rejoice with them that the late despotism of twenty years had fallen. Some said that régime helped material prosperity, but they should remember how under it corruption had spread and could have been perhaps what was being done in Prussia by the Government they could not approve. It was against liberty and against their religious principles. He had no sympathy with Jesuitism, but let them not use Jesuitical weapons and principles against them. Decided progress, however, was being made in France. The Budget of Public Worship voted by the National Assembly was being increasingly condemned. Twenty years ago such a hope would have been thought absurd, but if the Republic lasted for twenty years longer they would see the vote for that Budget done away. In the last annual session that of the recent Synod they had held in Paris a resolution was passed in favor of the separation of Church and State. That separation, when it came, would hasten on the regeneration of the churches and help a revival of true religion. Then, after what he had said, he could not close Colognes and words had been heard there since Luther—he hoped those noble principles would find an echo in France. Meantime, they should look on themselves as the leaven hid in the meal. The first duty was to preach Christ, to help on what had been called the "interior mission." In France they were a minority, but they represented a great principle; and they were increasingly trying to do what they could in the way of Conferences, by a mission they were founding in New-Caledonia among the Communists there, also by labors among the workmen of Paris, and by a college they hoped shortly to establish there. Above all, let them not despair. God has already passed the plow over the soil. As in the case of the prophet Elijah, they had heard the Divine voice speaking to them in the whirlwind of fire; but He was now speaking to them in gentler tones, seeming to say to them, "Rise and be comforted." God had smitten them so severely because he had great designs in the future for France.

New Site for Trinity College Decided Upon.

From the Hartford Courant, Oct. 29.

We understand that the trustees of Trinity College have located the site for the new College buildings, and that they have agreed to purchase of Mr. Penfield the grounds known as the "Babcock Farm," containing about forty acres, and located north of Park and west of Putnam street. The property fronts 1,800 feet on Park and about 1,700 feet on Putnam-street, with a northerly boundary adjoining the grounds of the Weed Sewing-machine Company, and westerly to the Park River. No more judicious selection could possibly have been made. It is really a delightful spot. Park River curves gracefully around its north-western and western boundaries, and a fine grove of natural forest-trees covers acres of the river's bank, making it a lovely park, that needs, in its natural beauty, hardly the touch of ax or spade. The price to be paid for the property has not as yet been made public, but we also learn from the first been favored by a majority of the trustees, among them Messrs. English and Sheffield, of New-Haven, who, it is said, voted to sell the college grounds on condition that the "Babcock Farm" grounds should be purchased for the new site.

Death of a Wealthy Laborer.

From the Terre Haute (Ind.) Gazette, Oct. 14.

Saturday afternoon, Rev. James Hill, of Ashbury M. E. Church, was summoned to the death-bed of one of the rolling-mill hands, at a boarding-house near the nail-works. Reaching the house, Mr. Hill found the sick man suffering from typhoid fever and flux, and soon saw that the patient was not long for this world. The kind-hearted gentleman did all he could to spiritually comfort the sickone, who proved to be a Welshman named Thomas Evans, of Pittsburg, but he was nigh unto death's door, and was rapidly declining. Last night he breathed his last, and those who had attended him in his last sickness and who were his friends in health opened his trunk, to their surprise finding unmistakable evidence of the wealth of the deceased, being not less than $50,000, consisting of bank accounts, money loaned on securities of various kinds, and farming lands. Evidences were also found that led to the belief that he has a wife in Pittsburg, Penn., from whom he has been separated for some time, whether legally or not, is yet a mystery. The history of the life of the deceased is one of mystery, he being worth an ample competency, and a common day laborer in a business that can but be very laborious. His hands were blackened and hardened, showing beyond a doubt that he had long been engaged in this avocation. He could not have been more than thirty-five years of age, from the best we can learn.

THE FAR WEST.

The Otter Tail Region, Minnesota—What a New Settler Can Do—Western Enterprise—An Engineering Camp—A Noted Camp-Follower—A Three-Yoke-Old Town—Natural Parks—A Ride Across the Red River Bottoms—Game—The Railroad as an Agent of Progress.

From Our Own Correspondent.

OTTER TAIL CROSSING, NEAR THE MOUTH OF PELICAN RIVER, Friday, Sept. 20, 1872.

The wonderful beauty of the lake and river scenery of Minnesota is not better illustrated than here in Otter Tail County, a section which abuts on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the new road now in process of construction between that road and the St. Paul and Pacific, lower down in the State.

Otter Tail Lake is a beautiful sheet of water, with sandy bottom and shores; is some ten miles long by six in breadth, abounding in fish and wild fowl, and it is picturesque and beautiful beyond conception. No wonder, therefore, that the region around is attracting numbers of settlers, who, in possession of its rich lands, soon find themselves blessed with an independence. Indeed, to bring the matter close home to us of the engineering camp, one of the commonest illustrations of this success of the new settlers may be found in the person and family of the farmer nearest to our camp today, a sturdy, sensible man, who has extended various little courtesies and accommodations to us out of his now abundant resources as a successful frontier agriculturist. Fortunate as we have been in pitching our tents near the spring which supplies his family, his large garden has furnished us some of the finest vegetables one ever sees anywhere; while the clear river in front, giving us for the past day or two plentiful supplies of fine fish, pike, bass and bull-pout, added to the contributions of the hunters, has enabled our capable commissary to really set a bountiful and desirable table, such as is seldom excelled under similar circumstances.

The case of our friend, the settler alluded to, is one of thousands. Three years ago he was the denizen of a small town, and only making a bare living there for himself and a young and growing family. Rent, firewood, provisions to be purchased so regularly absorbed all his earnings that he finally determined to strike out and see if he could not better the condition of his finances and his household. In company with a brother-in-law the start was made promptly; and after many weeks spent at "prospecting," the two depending mostly upon their guns and fishing-lines for subsistence, they came upon this pleasant and choice locality, and which at last furnished them with good homes, and in three years he finds himself with a snug house, 250 acres of rich land, wood and water plenty, and altogether, his horses, land, cattle, &c., he is worth several thousand dollars.

One is frequently struck out here with a spirit of enterprise seldom witnessed elsewhere. At the crossing of the Otter Tail River by the Northern Pacific one might have seen, a few weeks ago, a steam saw-mill in full operation, which the proprietor had not even time to roof in, but which, notwithstanding its crude look and surroundings, was doing a rousing business, evidenced by the great piles of lumber it was turning out, and the large quantities of saw-logs which were afloat near by waiting to be cut up. On all sides are seen similar quick movements and valuable results, growing out of the great rush of settlers and the needful means for providing them with shelter and a good start.

An engineering camp out here presents not only good points of observation, but a good many attractions besides, to one who desires a sojourn temporarily in the wilds; because, aiming at certain points as yet in the line of no beaten track, or "trail," the men of the "transit" lead us across forests, rivers or plains, or by the margin of the beautiful lakes, with the sure comfort of a reasonably good shelter at night. A camp of ten men must have transportation for their luggage, a proper commissariat, &c., &c.; and when the labors of the day are over, and we are seated around the camp-fires, one is sure to find, even in that small circle of pioneers engaged in laying out a pathway for the iron horse, men who have experienced almost every vicissitude in wild travel over half the continent—from the scenes of their current labors even to the shores of the Pacific and to Puget Sound.

Speaking of the comforts of this particular camp, all hands are constantly congratulating themselves, the presence of a certain devoted camp-follower—one "Sookey"—about the best and prettiest Durham that ever dispensed lacteal luxury. Sookey is a character; and old Levi, the camp caterer, who most affectionately attends on her, is another, and the two are a decided study for any philosopher who may wish to speculate upon the nature and scope of queer attachments. Whenever the encampment is broken up, the cow takes up the line of march behind the big wagon, laden with tents and other camp equipage; and the other day, although she made a tramp of twenty-one miles, occasionally taking a mouthful of grass, she was astonishingly fresh at the journey's end, and at night gave her usual tribute of a bucketful of milk, to the delight of all present. The fun of it was, that if old Levi fell behind on the march, she went back, lowing and bellowing, to find him, and looked satisfied to an amusing degree, when she could trudge alongside of him again. Let me add that her place at meal times is most commonly around our open-air table, where, with her nose most complacently pushed in between the shoulders of some two of us, she can have, occasionally, a biscuit, piece of bread, or a potato handed back to her, thus making her a participant in the feast to which she had contributed. This shows what gentle treatment, even from rough frontiersmen, will effect upon animals, and should be worthy of reflection even to those more fortunately situated.

I have spoken of the Otter Tail Lake as one of the most beautiful and attractive, even of the many lakes of this delightful region. The traveler moving in a south-west course down the Otter Tail River, finds that after a while it be comes the Red River; and in this section is a clear, beautiful, swift stream, which coming, as it does, from large and permanent reservoirs, scarcely ever shows much rise or fall, the first place of note on its banks being a new town hardly three years old, called Fergus Falls, from the name of the cascade, or falls, at that point. The town lies upon both sides of the river, a substantial bridge joining it together, and here we find a pretty church, several stores, hotels, a huge saw, lath, and shingle mill, a grist and merchant mill, bank, Post-office, land office, &c., similar to older towns. Indeed, favored with the two great and manifest advantages of rich lands and a splendid, never-failing, and equable water-power, perfectly controllable within high banks, its prosperity and growth appear already assured, and make it one of the most promising places in the whole State.

One of those sensations, which becomes at times almost a perfect illusion in the Otter Tail region, is the appearance it bears of an old and settled country, like parts of England or Belgium, the presence of costly mansions being all that is necessary to make one feel that it has been settled for centuries; and one almost expects, at times, as he mounts some of those charming emerald slopes, with their rounded summits and graceful curves, to come upon a stately villa fitting to the scene. So remarkable is this feeling, or half-way illusion, that it actually drowns the feeling of loneliness.

Breaking up our encampment, and taking a south-westerly course toward Dakota and Breckenridge, distant from the Otter Tail crossing below the mouth of Pelican about twenty-one miles, we find the country a rolling prairie for the first ten miles or so, reaching finally almost a dead level of green plain, as we strike the famous "Red River bottoms." Here at Breckenridge, the Bois de Sioux River joins the Red River, Lake Traverse being the source of the former; and the two combined, joined from point to point by the Pelnu, the Buffalo, the Big Maple, Cheyenne and other streams, finally makes the "Red River of the North" navigable for steamers from the Northern Pacific, crossing up into the British possessions.

As, mounted on a stout mustang, we proceed over the plains in advance of the encampment, we see geese, sand-hill cranes and ducks in abundance, and are occasionally favored with a shot at some of them; the ducks, particularly, rising in clouds from the small lakes scattered along the way. At one place we came upon the fresh tracks of an elk, where he had walked up and down a dry slough; but the animal did not make its appearance. All along the route are scattered at intervals the great granite boulders which go to establish the glacial theory, and prove that the country has been some time in the far past a vast lake; the traveler having that idea forced upon his mind over and over again by the character of the soil and other indications.

Breckenridge, the present terminus of the St. Paul and Pacific Road, appears to be quite a thriving place; for, besides its own population, we find groups and encampments of Indians and half-breeds from Fort Garry and other points, with their furs. We see here, too, trains laden with horses, mules, and various supplies for the frontier forts; these telling the story of how essential this road has become to the uses of the Government, and to the progress making in settling up the country still further West. At this point, also, we see that the Red River has that peculiar color which distinguishes it for the rest of its course northwardly; and its current is rapid, too, indicating the rough navigation between this point and Moorhead.

Here we were greatly amused at seeing a half-breed attempt to save the twenty-five cent ferriage fee across the river, by making his small nag half wade, half swim, in the endeavor to ford it. The bed of the river appeared to give him a firm footing enough, but when he sought to get up the muddy bank he was regularly "mired," and had great difficulty, even by aid of his associates, in getting the concern to firm ground, breaking me of the runnings gear in doing so. He granted his dissatisfaction loudly at the conclusion; but the experiment served to show us that the river was, in some sort, fordable at that point.

Coming back toward St. Paul from Breckenridge, the distance between the two points being a little over two hundred miles, one finds for a good distance from the last-named place the characteristic richness of the Red River bottoms; and also a scarcity of timber, which would almost indefinitely retard progress and settlement, but for the agency of that potent instrumentality in modern advancement—the railroad. Sixteen miles distant is Campbell Station, the staring-point by stage-line for Fergus Falls and the Otter Tail settlements; and as along in this quarter the Pembina Road will somewhere strike the St. Paul and Pacific, the spaces between will ultimately be filled up.

Further down still, we find numbers of little lakes again spangling the surface of the country, the coves in them black with ducks and geese, and more and more the signs of industry and thrift manifesting themselves, as great wheat fields spread out their rich treasures to the sun, the grain now being in the shock or stack and awaiting the visit of the threshers, when will give it to market and to consumers in the older States. It is a glorious exhibit indeed, and shows—in connection with the busy and large towns springing up on the line of the road—that railroads need wait no longer for business in being constructed, but that they create it.

The Roman Catholic Clergy on Human Liberty.

From the New-York Tribune, Nov. 19, 1864.

The Tablet dissents from some portion of our recent strictures on the clerical and teachings of the Roman Catholic clergy in our country, touching the slaveholders' rebellion and its causes—dissents more especially to our remark, that the influence of said clergy coincides with that of the grog-shops, in keeping our Irish-born population in an attitude of sympathy and virtual co-operation with the slave power, now struggling desperately to destroy our Union. We do not understand the Tablet to deny the substantial truth of our assertion, but rather to dissent from our grouping as disrespectful and irreverent. But the truth is always to be spoken when anything is, and it seems to us that this substantial accord between the clergy of one of our most numerous bodies of Christians and the keepers, almost without exception, of the haunts of low dissipation and moral ruin, properly challenges investigation and reflection. Why should the great body of the clergy of any Christian denomination be of one mind in politics with the keepers and frequenters of the haunts of vice and infamy? What is the "mystic tie that binds" these seemingly incongruous classes in political fellowship? Here is a grave fact: The priests of a great and venerable Church, and the keepers of the dance-houses of Water-street and the rum-holes of Corlaer's Hook and Greenwich, and the Five Points ardently supporting, with scarcely an individual exception, the same candidates in our recent election. What purpose, what impulse, what sympathy have they in common? Who will give us the true reason of their accord?

Do you say that they are alike opposed to intermeddling with what is none of their (or our) business? Then let us shift the scene, and see how your explanation adapts itself to the resulting parallax.

The City of New-Orleans, now nearly a century and a half old, was originally settled by Roman Catholics, and we have still there its most numerous and wealthy denomination. It is the residence of an Archbishop, with a numerous and influential clergy. That city was very early, if not at its foundation, cursed with slavery, for, on its transfer by France to Spain, in 1763, of its 3,190 inhabitants, no less than 1,225 were slaves. In 1860, its population had increased to 168,823, whereof barely 19,380 were slaves. But New-Orleans had now become the greatest slave mart on earth, Havana and Dahomey not excepted, and the focus of the harshest and most exacting system of slave-working ever known to Christians, while for crueler than was ever tolerated in a Mohammedan country. In that City of New-Orleans, under the shadow of a Roman Catholic Cathedral, crimes against humanity and decency were constantly and publicly perpetrated by wholesale at barracoons and slave auctions, in the very heart of the city, of young men and women and female children, who often commanded enormous prices, notoriously for the gratification of the most brutal lust.

At these auctions husbands were sold away from wives, mothers from their young children, not occasionally, but by wholesale and almost daily, for scores of years. Many of the victims as well as many of the perpetrators were Roman Catholics; yet, notwithstanding that the Catholic Church propounds and maintains the most rigorous and salutary doctrines with regard to the sanctity and indissolubility of marriage, we have never heard of a protest by any Archbishop of New-Orleans against these slave auctions which were the scandal of Christendom. That Catholic women and girls were sold by hundreds to libertines for the most infamous purposes has never, within our knowledge, evoked even a spirited remonstrance from the Archiepiscopal champions at New-Orleans of the Immaculate Conception.

Nay, more. Today Louisiana has rival Governors and Governments, one of them located in New-Orleans and based on the right of all men and women to freedom, the other somewhere in the north-western quarter of the State, and fighting to destroy the Union in the interest and for the perpetuation of negro slavery. And today the Archbishop of New-Orleans and all (or nearly all) his clergy are the ardent, active, bitter, obstinate partisans and champions of the rebel, disunion, pro-slavery Government of Louisiana and the relentless foes of its free rival. In other words, they are doing their utmost to restore at New-Orleans the crimes, infamies, and abominations of the system of divorce at the dictate of a master's caprice, lust, avarice, and of rape, enforced concubinage, and bestiality, which has been banished from that city by the triumph of Union arms.

Now, if there were anything in the ordinances, the inculcations, or the traditions of the Catholic Church universal that required this, we could understand, though we could not approve or justify it; but the fact seems to be emphatically otherwise than this. The antipathy of race, so cited as to justify Irish persecution of "negurs," is utterly unknown at Rome, where a negro black as midnight is received in society, ordained to the priesthood, and consecrated a Bishop precisely as if he were a white man, and whence the most memorable Papal bull issued in our time—that of Pope Gregory, 1839—condemns and denounces slavery as inhuman and unchristian. So Bishop Dupanloup and other eminent Catholics of our day are ardent contemners of slavery, while Augustin Cochin was recently knighted by the Pope for his admirably convincing treatise, showing the beneficial results of West India emancipation. We cannot recall the name of a single eminent Catholic in Europe who is an upholder or advocate of slavery. Will any one explain to us the pro-slavery attitude of the Catholic clergy in this country?

Movement of Coal from Pittsburg.

From the Cincinnati Gazette, Oct. 28.

The amount of coal that left Pittsburg yesterday on the present rise was 5,268,000 bushels, with forty-two tow-boats, of which 2,138,000 bushels are to stop at Cincinnati, the remainder going below. There are forty-four tow-boats still remaining at Pittsburg, and, as there are 18,000,000 bushels of coal waiting for a rise, it will be seen the boats will have all they can bring on a single trip, and a good deal more. The largest amount of coal ever brought down on a single rise was a little over 8,000,000 bushels. The amount started on a single day of the present rise is only 3,000,000 bushels less than during all the days of the big river last spring. Our reports last night showed that it was still raining in the Allegheny and Monongahela regions, and both rivers were rising. A rise is thus assured that will enable all the coal now loaded on barges at Pittsburg to be brought out.

OUR ART SCHOOLS.

The Cooper Institute.

Just before the TIMES commenced its great fight against corruption, there was an universal conviction among all classes of citizens that public spirit was dead. Men even went the length of arguing that it must be so in the natural course of events; that public spirit was simply an early phase of the life of nations, which in maturity was superseded by private interest. In the midst of these fine theories the champion arose, and the battle was fought and won. So blind is man ever to the present, even to the things of which he is capable of judging. It is strange, but nevertheless true, that even at that gloomy time, before the champion had thrown his glove into the face of the giant in the cause of honesty, New-York was blessed with an unusual number of far-seeing broad-viewed men who, in comparative obscurity, were occupied in planning for the future greatness of the City. The historian who, in the year of grace 1972, traces the annals of the land will recur again and again with ever increasing admiration to this very epoch as specially the parent of the prosperity that shall then be. As the present fades into the past before his gaze, the dull forms of unknown men separate themselves from the obscure crowd, brighten with strange lustre, and loom into the foreground with gigantic proportions. They are avowedly the great men of their time. But those who were thought great by their contemporaries, dwindle and sink into atomies not to be distinguished from that general mass of mankind which gives nothing to posterity save the vantage ground of standing on it.

To go into the many schemes for the future, the great reformation of prisoners, the punishment of moral offenses, the building up of the industrial arts, and of artistic industries, will furnish some day employment for many eloquent pens. The present sketch will be confined to the formation of those art schools by means of which artistic industries are being developed in our midst, almost without our knowledge. Of these there are but two, the Academy of Design and the Cooper Institute; though the day will come when the Metropolitan Museum of Art will be more important than either. Moreover, as the Academy of Design is restricted to purely artistic aims, this sketch must be confined to the schools of the Cooper Institute, designed specially for the development of those industrial pursuits, which are controlled by art, and whose prosperity depends entirely on the excellence of the art applied to them. Among these are wood-carving, cabinet-making, porcelain and earthenware manufactures, gas fixtures, architectural ornamentation, jewelry, engraving, photography, working in gold and silver plate, and others less important. When good Peter Cooper, in April 1859, made the noble presentation of this Institute to the Country, almost all articles of the above-named industries were imported. At the present hour we have made in some of them immense progress, and in others we have at least attempted something. Twenty years from this time we shall be fairly abreast in all of them, with the foremost nations of civilization. For in these schools eight hundred boys and men, already engaged in these very pursuits, are nightly taught those transcendent laws of beauty whose realization has given to France, to Italy, to Germany, and to England their supremacy. The pupils it must be confessed are mainly of foreign extraction, the great majority being German, but they are true citizens, and we have all the benefit of their inherited aptitude developed to its highest pitch by favorable surrounding conditions.

The Art Schools of the Cooper Institute comprise the Female Schools of Design in the day time, and the Night Schools for Males. In the first the circumstances are altogether different from the second, and therefore all the arrangements are different, for it is primarily the object of the institution to benefit the pupils as much as possible, and as soon as possible to enable them to reap a positive pecuniary profit from their instruction. The males who attend the night schools are all employed in the day time, therefore their course is at night. They are employed in certain industries, therefore they are taught exactly what will profit them in their own line. The ladies, on the contrary, have no occupation, and so they are instructed in the day time. For those who have employment, an exceptional class is formed, attended by one section on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and by the other, Wednesdays and Fridays, thus giving them four days in the week to earn money for their support. But the great majority of the ladies are those who who are learning an occupation, and who, accordingly desire, by devoting all their time to study, to learn as quick as possibly. There are not many ways in which women can find artistic employment. The chief are teaching, drawing, photography and engraving. To these things the present Principal, Mrs. Susan N. Carter, devotes special attention. In the first, naturally, a good knowledge of elementary drawing is nearly all that is requisite, and this can be acquired thoroughly in one year in the Institute, that is, from October to May. Those, therefore, who desire to teach drawing are permitted to devote themselves specially to the elementary branch, which, to tell the truth, stops short of the most valuable instruction that the Institute affords. The branching off place is naturally from the elementary. The pupil can elect to go to photography, taught most thoroughly by Carl Hecker, or she can advance higher in the true art direction, and be taught drawing from antique casts, by Signor F. Venino, or she can learn wood-engraving from a most admirable instructor, Miss Charlotte B. Cogswell, who has turned out some first-class designers from her alcove. Among them is notably Miss Curtis, engaged by Ticknor & Fields, as an illustrator, at a high salary. Many of the most charming designs in Our Young Folks are from her pencil. But this requires a special aptitude, and out of the 155 pupils at present studying, only a small proportion go to Miss Cogswell. Photography is a very lucrative occupation, and is chosen by at least one half, the remainder go through the legitimate art course and prepare themselves for the schools of the Academy of Design, the natural succursal of an art training.

He who desires to visit the Female School of Design can do so on Friday, when it is open to the public from 11 o'clock until 1 P. M. He will find it on the floor above the reading-room. The pupils come at 9 o' clock, with the exception of those who live at a distance, many pupils coming daily from points twenty and thirty miles away. There are, indeed, two young ladies who come from Stamford, Conn., and are most regular attendants, and manifest amazing day. The lesson, if it may be so termed, ends at 1 o'clock, P. M., but the pupils have the privilege of staying until 4 o'clock to draw without instruction for the sake of practice. The locale of the classes is peculiar from being above the reading-room, whose great height materially cripples the space awarded to the schools, which are arranged in long galleries, divided off into alcoves by partitions. In the first five are the pupils learning elementary drawing, taught by the Principal, Mrs. Carter, a very accomplished woman. Copying from a flat surface is absolutely tabooed, every beginner having to commence in the true artistic way, from objects cast in plaster. These are of the most varied forms, from simple cones and cylinders up to bunches of grapes, apples with leaves, and things which present numerous curves and difficult shading. When a pupil thinks she can conquer greater difficulties she advances to the antique, under Signor Venino. Mrs. Carter, who is to all these girls like a dear sister, never makes any objections even if the pupil be taken to the extent of her progress. She asks her if she is sure she can do the work in the next department, the result being, nine times out of ten, that the pupil is sent back by Signor Venino as not yet fit for the casts of the human body. The former Principal, Miss Child, who came straight from the South Kensington Museum, failed to get the affectionate esteem of her pupils in this way, and was something of a stumbling block to artistic progress, driving away some girls who certainly would have honored the Institute. She was a determined advocate of point shading, and would not allow any stump shading at all. The present instructor shows her pupils that in elementary drawing a clear, good, firm outline is the great point, and that as to point and stump shading, sometimes one and sometimes the other can be used with greater advantage. It is a pleasant thing to see her bending over a bright young girl copying an acanthus leaf, or an intricate piece of German or French scroll work, pointing out the spirit and meaning of the curves, and how these designs could be and are employed in decorative art. The next alcoves are where figure drawing is taught, but here the screens are removed, and the whole forms one long room. The girls with their easels are grouped this way and that, drawing from casts at different angles. Here will be a group of Mercur tacking a colossal hand in which all the veins and nerves are elaborately defined. Apollo far from him will be another sphere attempting the armless Venus of Milo, the most loved of all the antiques. A third party will be drawing the immortal head of Psyche, a fourth the bending Venus that enchants the world, a fifth the elegant strength of Theseus. Nine-tenths of the pupils are more than good looking, and their late faces and bright-colored dresses stand out in warm relief against the colorless plaster and against the darkened walls. They are flushed with the excitement that the comprehension of the beautiful never fails to give, drinking in the beauty of line and the glory of expression like wine, and warm with generous rivalry. Here certainly they are at their best, and no sweetheart or friend shall ever see them look better in their homes, though tricked out in all the finery of fashion.

From signor Venino and his casts the visitor progresses to Carl Hecker and his photographic teachings. He is emphatically a thorough man and an excellent master. But, alas, when one regards the groups whom he is teaching painting in black and white from antique casts as a preparatory to painting photographs, one cannot but feel a certain pain. For many of the pupils here are comparatively old women, one certainly is forty-five at the least, and they have an anxious look that comes after the roseate flush of the others like a wet blanket. They are desirous of gaining a comfortable livelihood, and they have been told, and justly, that painting photographs is the way to get it. They look as if they had staked their little heap of savings, or the pitiful wreck of past affluence, upon this chance. But there is an age beyond which the hand is no longer capable of delicate instruction. The mind may receive, the eye may learn, but the hand cannot be taught to obey them. Then adieu to comfort, adieu to warm rooms and good food and pleasant friends, and out into the cold to receive humbly the scraps that may fall from rich men's tables. But the retouching of positives in oil-colors, water-colors, crayon, and sepia, though the great prize, for it is worth $30 a week, is not the only one open to the quick eye and a clever hand. The retouching of negatives, removing the spots with the fine point of a pencil by very delicate strokes, is worth $25 a week, and has numerous votaries. It really can very well be done by one who knows nothing of art, but it must be learned by one eyesight. It is necessary, however, for those who desire to learn this to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with photography in all its branches, and this is most thoroughly taught by Carl Hecker. There are lectures on the chemistry of the tubs; and on optics and lights; then the students are taught to take negatives, and then to print off the positives. They are also instructed in the mystery of posing, of which en parenthèse it may be said that there is great need, for the present practitioners are utterly stupid and incapable, and it is to them that most photographs are indebted for the unpleasant, constrained look. The taking landscape views, inlaying and painting porcelain positives, complete the instruction.

The night schools are differently conducted. In the first place, they have at last won the appreciation of the classes for whom they were meant, for, as such God's wonderful world of the Internal Revenue laws. The verdict sustained the charge, and this writ of error seeks to reverse the judgment rendered on the verdict, on the ground that the evidence upon which the conviction was sustained was a showing by the Government that Waterman had before been guilty of bad faith with the Government. It is contended that such evidence will not support the charge, although taken in connection with that circumstance, is su

GENERAL TELEGRAMS.

A GALA NIGHT IN BOSTON.

Grand Republican Torch-Light Procession—The Entire City Illuminated—Fifteen Thousand Men in the Ranks.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 30.—The campaign in Massachusetts was virtually closed this evening by one of the most brilliant and successful torch-light parades ever seen in New-England, though many circumstances combined to detract from the numbers represented. The various organizations of Tanners and Grant Guards gathered on the Common at an early hour, and the scene was one of remarkable brilliancy. In every direction tanners were marching to the rendezvous in full uniform, each organization accompanied by a band of music. The transparencies displayed were numerous, and the mottoes sharp and in many cases very funny. One noticeable feature was a full-rigged ship, forty-five feet long, fully manned and drawn by ex-sailors in the navy. Promptly at 8 o'clock the column moved, preceded by Gilmore's Band. There was hardly a break in the line of illuminations from the start to the end of the march. The elegant residences on the Back Bay were finely lighted up with gas and Chinese lanterns. Fireworks were displayed at prominent points on every street through which the procession passed, and flags were hung out, and in many cases the letters "U. S. G." shone out everywhere in letters of light. The number in line is variously estimated at from 12,00 to 15,000. In any case it must fully equal in point of number any parade of former years, while in elegance of uniforms, excellence of discipline and good order, its equal was never seen, probably, anywhere. The men marched like veterans, and every man went through the four hours' march. The cavalry portion of the procession, which would have numbered 2,000 men, was prevented from appearing by the disease which has made pedestrians of us all. Nevertheless, the line was more than an hour passing a given point. Though the Democracy made a very creditable show four years ago, the scoreheads will not attempt any parade this year. They could hardly muster half a thousand torches. In one ward where there is a Grant and Wilson regiment there is not even a solitary company of wood-choppers.

MARYLAND.

Grand Republican Meeting in Baltimore—An Astonisher in Reserve for the Fusionists.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 30.—There was an immense turn-out at the Republican mass-meeting held in Monument-square this evening. A magnificent stand, elaborately decorated, was erected about the centre of the north end of the square, for the accommodation of the speakers. Near it rose the skeleton of the stand to be used to-morrow night by the Democratic speakers at a Greeley and Brown ratification meeting. Before 8 o'clock the space around the stand was thronged, and by the time the presiding officer of the evening, Major George T. Castle, took his place a splendid assemblage was present. Among the Vice-Presidents announced was Gen. Felix Agnus, formerly of New-York. An accident on the Pennsylvania Central prevented Gov. Hartranft and Hon. James A. Negley, of Pittsburg, from making connection with the Northern Central at Harrisburg. Their absence was noticed, but atoned for by the excellence of the speeches of Col. L. E. Dudley, of New-York; Col. Wm. McMichael, of Philadelphia, and others.

Maryland, thought so sure for Greeley by an overwhelming majority, will surprise the fusionists, as the Republicans are working hard and unitedly.

NEW-YORK.

Gen. Butler, Gen. Warwick, and Gen. Noble at Watkins and Elmira—Three Large Meetings.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Oct. 30.—Gen. B. F. Butler, Gen. J. H. Warwick, and Gov. B. G. Noble spoke this afternoon to an immense mass-meeting at Watkins, Schuyler County, awakening great enthusiasm. This evening the two former spoke twice each in this city, in the Opera-house and the Wigwam, both halls being crowded to their utmost capacity, although the former alone was found entirely too large for the late Democratic grand rally last evening. All the southern tier, including Steuben, is wide awake, and will make a good report on Tuesday. E. C.

GREAT STORM IN KANSAS.

Solid Bits of Ice Falling—Two Day's Rain—Immense Damage Occasioned.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SOLOMON, Kansas, Oct. 30.—The country hereabout has been visited by one of the hardest and most destructive storms that has occurred in this section for over three years. On Monday the weather opened warm and very oppressive in its sultriness, with every indication of a rapidly approaching change. In the evening the thermometer began falling rapidly, and a furious rain-storm set in. During the night bits of solid ice, some of them weighing fully two ounces each, dropped down in large numbers, causing great damage to window-glass and sky-lights. For the past forty-eight hours a heavy rain has continued to pour down, and the different streams in the neighborhood have risen high above their usual bounds, and in many places the country is being rapidly inundated. Reports are now coming in from the surrounding country to the effect that many herds of cattle have been scattered by the storm, and as it has now cleared off very cold, much loss is anticipated in consequence. THE STEAMER MISSOURI.

Further Particulars of the Burning of the Ill-Fated Vessel—A Heavy Gale Blowing and All But One Boat Swamped.

The following dispatches contain additional details of the burning of the steamer Missouri to those printed on the second page:

KEY WEST, Fla., Oct. 30.—The steamer Missouri, of the Atlantic Mail line, was burned at sea in a gale on the 22d inst., about twenty-five miles from Abaco, en route for Havana, via Nassau, N. P. Twelve persons were saved, as follows: George Thackery, Enrique Yanco, W. F. Tunnell, Ebenezer Saunders, O. E. Outerbridge, James Culmer, and John Rehels, passengers; Wm. Jones, seaman; Samuel Corn, seaman; Patrick McGowen, waiter; Lewis Bobme, pantryman, and Richard Murphy, second pantryman. The fire was discovered about 9 A. M. in the pantry, and suddenly burst out in volumes of flame amidships, spreading rapidly over the ship. The boats were launched immediately, and all but one were swamped at once. Those remaining on board were compelled, on account of the flames, to jump into the sea. Those saved landed in one of the boats in Abaco about 6 P. M. on the evening of the 22d, and were taken from there in a small schooner to Nassau. It was a terrible night for those in the floating boat to see those in the water clinging to the swamped boats, and begging for assistance. There were about ten ladies on board. It is not known whether any of the missing have since been picked up. It is said the Captain used every effort to save the lives of the passengers, working bravely himself with the hose. Three of the saved passengers are now here.

This information was brought here this afternoon by the steamer Anna, from Nassau, to the British Consul, and communications were sent to the Atlantic Mail Company's office in New-York. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Two of the boats of the ill-fated Missouri were burned alongside the vessel, and there is no probability that any of the others ever reached the shore. It is probable that not a single life would have been saved had it not been for James Culmer, a resident of Eleuthera and a passenger on board. A new boat had been purchased in New-York and placed on deck, but, as the weather had been boisterous, she had not been secured either by gripes or by chocks. When it was known that the vessel would go down, Culmer, with a few others, launched this boat, holding fast the painter. When he jumped overboard and swam to the boat, eleven others followed him, and even then, had it not been for Culmer, who was acquainted with the management of a boat, and took charge and piloted her safely through the surf, she would have been lost with the others. The three passengers who are here were bound to Havana, and will be forwarded to that port by John J. Philbrick, the agent of the Atlantic Mail Steamship line at this port, who has taken every measure toward securing their comfort.

Further particulars will probably be received to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 30.—The Department of State has received a dispatch from Vice-Consul Saunders, at Nassau, announcing the loss by fire of the steam-ship Missouri. The only additional information in the names of the twelve persons saved, who formed a portion of the passengers and crew.

DELAWARE.

Republicans Working Like Beavers—Senator Wilson to Speak in Milford and Wilmington.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 30.—Delaware is in a perfect political ferment. The Republicans are working like beavers. Hon. J. F. Manning, of Massachusetts, and Wm. Nicholson, Esq., of Philadelphia, addressed a large meeting to-night in Wilmington. Senator Wilson will speak in Milford on Saturday afternoon, and in Wilmington, seventy miles distant, the same evening.

CONNECTICUT.

Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Stanton Address a Large Republican Meeting in Hartford—Hawley to be Elected.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Oct. 30.—Mrs. Mary A. Livermore and Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton addressed the largest political meeting that has gathered in this city during the campaign, at Allyn Hall, this evening. The hall was crowded in every part. Gov. Jewell presided. The addresses of the ladies were very eloquent and the audience enthusiastic and responsive at every patriotic utterance. These ladies have done excellent service here for the Republican cause.

The First Congressional District is alive with meetings, and active political work is done on both sides. The Republicans are confident of Gen. Hawley's election over Eaton by a handsome majority.

A large mass-meeting in Rockville today was addressed by Gov. Jewell, Judge Thos. Russell, of Boston, and Gen. Hawley.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Tom Hughes Going Out of Politics—Reported Opinion of German Experts on the San Juan Boundary Question.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—Mr. Thomas Hughes has issued an address to his constituents of Frome, informing them that he will not stand as a candidate at the next election for member of Parliament.

A special dispatch to the Daily News from Berlin says the three experts to whom the Emperor William referred the San Juan boundary case, in their reports to His Majesty, recommended, as a compromise of the dispute, the adoption of the middle channel as the boundary line between British and American territory. The reports of the experts have not yet been published.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—Hon. John Jay, the American Minister to Austria, who came to London to be present at the marriage of his daughter, and has since remained here, left yesterday for his post of duty at Vienna.

The Marquis of Ripon, who presided over the High Joint Commission, which framed the Alabama Treaty at Washington, delivered an address, last evening, at Ripon, in Yorkshire, upon the results of the arbitration at Geneva. The speaker expressed himself as thankful that all the points unvoived in the Treaty of Washington had been peacefully and amicably settled. He regarded this as a great step toward the preservation of the peace of the world. Though, said the Marquis, the controversy between the two nations had been sometimes keen and eager, the feelings of the peoples, as well as of the respective Governments, had never become embittered.

He believed that the arbitration at Geneva had been the means of inaugurating good relations between England and the United States, which would long endure.

The cholera has appeared at Wexford, Ireland, where one death from the disease has occurred.

Right Hon. Lord Penzance, Judge of the English Court of Proate, has resigned.

SPAIN.

Attempt to Obtain Possession of Gibraltar.

MADRID, Oct. 30.—A petition was presented to the Cortes today by one of the Republican Deputies asking the adoption of measures looking to the procurement from England of the cession of Gibraltar to Spain.

The Cortes has resolved, by a vote of 124 against 104, to consider articles of impeachment against the members of the Sagasta's Ministry.

HUNGARY.

Ravages of the Cholera.

BUDA, Oct. 30.—The cholera is making serious ravages here. Ninety-four cases are reported, of which twenty-seven have proved fatal. Among the cases are those of twenty-nine soldiers who were stricken ill simultaneously, and of whom five have died.

FRANCE.

Louis Blanc on the Republic—Suspicions of Treachery on the Part of Several Officers.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—M. Louis Blanc, in an address to the Republicans of Avignon, demonstrates the necessity for the prompt dissolution of the National Assembly, and opposes the appointment of a President of the Republic, the Presidency being, in his belief, "a counterfeit royalty, which would perpetually endanger the liberties of the country."

A rumor is afloat in official circles that Gen. De Cissey will resign the Ministry of War in the event that an inquiry is ordered by the President into the conversation of certain army officers at La Fare, who are charged with asserting that the Minister of War, and the members of his staff, entertained strong sympathies for the Bonapartes.

Count Von Arnim, the German Ambassador to France, has arrived here from Berlin.

The Wife of Prince Napoleon Allowed to Remain in France.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—President Thiers has informed Princess Clouilde, wife of Prince Napoleon, that she is free to remain in France without interference by the Government authorities, if she so desires.

ANOTHER PRIZE-FIGHT.

Seddons' "Mouse" Fights in an Eighth Ward Bar-Room—Winning the Fight, He is Cut to Pieces with a Bottle.

After the dispersal of the roughs who, on Tuesday night, gathered in Owney Geoghegan's to witness the fight between Steve O'Rielly, alias George Seddons' "Mouse," and Geoghegan's "Rat," which did not take place, the Mouse, elated by his success, came down town and brought up in Mike Coburn's saloon, corner of Crosby and Houston streets, about 2 o'clock yesterday morning. Alderman Masterson, Mike Lyons and Coburn were drinking at the bar. They congratulated the "Mouse," and Masterson said he would back him, as there was no one able to beat him at his weight. The party entered Reddy the Blacksmith's about 3 o'clock, and found Jim Fogerty, Patsey Johnson, Wick Coffee, and other sportsmen there. Alderman Masterson said the Mouse was the greatest feather-weight in the United States, and that he would back him for $1,000. Fogerty replied he would get a boy that could beat the Mouse in ten minutes. Masterson said, "bring him along." Fogerty brought in a young sport named Billy Hall. They went to the room at the back of the store, and Hall and O'Reilly were stripped for the fight, when Tom Varley, a brother of the Blacksmith, told them there should be no fighting, and that he would call in the Police. Masterson, Coburn and Donovan left, the Mouse remaining. Hall would not fight, and Al. Haines, another young aspirant for the prize-ring, was named by Fogerty. O'Reilly said he would bet all the money he had, $20. The gang adjourned to the saloon of Tom. Larkin alias "Camphene Tommy," at the corner of Mercer and Houston streets. Larkin would not allow them to fight until they ordered $1 60 worth of drinks. This being done, he had no objection. The fight was then begun O'Reilly who is only seventeen years old, had not a single friend in the room. Haines was heavier, but by no means scientific. In the first round, the "Mouse" got in a straight left-hand blow on Haines' neck, which knocked him senseless, blood coming from his mouth and ears. Fogerty gave Haines a bullet to clutch in his right hand. The "Mouse," who did not know that, prevented Haines from getting in any blow at his head, and finally gave him a clean knock down. In the third round, while the "Mouse" had Haines "in chancery," and was pumping him, Fogerty crept up behind the "Mouse" and struck him on the head with a bottle, wounding him badly. This stopped the fight. Dick Canfield, who held the stakes, decided the affair a draw, though Haines was evidently beaten. The treatment of "the Mouse" by Fogerty created quite an excitement among sporting men, and last night George Seddons went to Reddy's, and offered to back the Mouse for $1,000 a side against any feather-weight.

GRAND RALLY IN BROOKLYN.

An Enthusiastic Demonstration—Six Thousand Persons in Torch-Light Procession.

One of the largest public demonstrations witnessed in Brooklyn for many years was the torch-light Republican parade of last evening, composed of the Grant and Wilson Clubs of fourteen wards, and numbering between 5,000 and 6,000 supporters of the Republican nominations. The utmost enthusiasm was manifested by the inhabitants, and fireworks and illuminations were general in all the streets through which the procession passed. Several of the streets, including Washington-street, Lafayette-avenue, Schermerhorn-street, Clinton and Fulton streets, presented a gorgeous appearance as the living mass of flame poured itself along from 6,000 torches, while the magnificent display of fire-works, at intervals along the route, broke overhead in a flood of variegated colors, so as to vie with the sparkling stars in the clear blue heavens above, and for a time to eclipse their lustre. Everything appeared to favor the procession; not a breeze ruffled the calm tranquility reigning around. As the evening twilight closed in upon the scene, the soul-stirring music of the several bands wakened up the vast multitudes thronging the street into cheer after cheer for Grant and Wilson. The ladies were particularly demonstrative on the occasion, and from the balconies and windows white handkerchiefs in promiscuous confusion waved a graceful and welcome salute, which was returned by the members of the several clubs as they passed. The streets were densely crowded—so much so that it seemed that all Brooklyn, from the oldest veteran politician to the youthful patriot, glowing with more than a manly ardor, had turned out to manifest their enthusiasm in support of the Republican institutions of the country. Throughout the entire multitude assembled there appeared to be but one feeling, one desire for the success of the Republican candidates next Tuesday.

At 8:40 the Fourth Ward Grant and Wilson Club, and the Ferguson Guards, a colored organization, formed into line of four deep, opposite the Republican Head-quarters, and while the band struck up "All Round the Flag," moved down Washington-street, through Concord-street, Adams-street, High-street, and Lawrence-street, into Fulton-street. Here the Eleventh Ward Club, 300 strong, joined in the ranks, and gave a new impetus to the enthusiasm so universal on all sides. At this juncture the crowd was so great on both sides of the streets that it was almost impossible to move through. Passing into Lafayette-avenue, twelve other clubs fell into the ranks, and the procession then pursued the following route:

Down Layfeyette-avenue to Flatbush-avenue, across Flatbush-avenue to Schermerhorn-street, down Schermerhorn-street to Clinton-street, down Clinton-street to First-place, down First-place to Henry-street, up Henry-street to Montague-street, up Montague-street to Fulton-street, across Fulton-street to Washington-street, down Washington-street to Sands-street, along Sands-street to Bridge-street, up Bridge-street to Fulton-street, where the parade was dismissed.

Col. John Hall commanded the mounted escort, and was indefatigable in his exertions to promote the success of the entire programme, which was most creditably carried out. A large number of the citizens joined in the procession, carrying torches and banners with various emblematical mottoes. During the route nothing occurred to mar the success of the demonstration, and after the procession was dismissed the crowds of citizens quietly dispersed to their respective homes.

The First Assembly Republican Association last night indorsed Nicholas Muller for Assembly, and Thomas Foley for Assistant Alderman.

The Thirteenth Assembly District German Reform Association, at a meeting in Seventh-avenue last night, ratified the nomination of Mr. Havemeyer for the Assembly.

The Sixteenth Assembly District German Reform organization, Emil Unger presiding, held a ratification meeting at No. 283 Avenue A, last evening, ratifying the nomination of William F. Havemeyer for the Mayoralty.

J. C. Julius Langbein has been nominated by the German Reform, Soldiers' and Sailors', Tax-payers', Polish and Hungarian Clubs as Assistant Alderman of the Eighth Assembly District.

Francis P. Healy, who was charged with fraudulently registering from the house No. 253 Mott-street, was discharged yesterday by Commissioner Davenport, Healy having clearly established his right to vote.

The Eighth Assembly District Young Men's Republican Association met last evening at No. 121 Allen-street, and indorsed the names of Conrad Geib for Congress, John B Smith for Assembly, and John Theiss for Assistant Alderman.

Speaker Blaine and Secretary Boutwell called yesterday at Republican National Committee Rooms, Fifth-avenue Hotel, and were received by Secretary Chandler. They express no doubt of the favorable issue of the National contest, and believe that New-York State is safe.

Affairs were very quiet at the head-quarters of the Greeley Republican National Committee, Gleuham Hotel, yesterday. A large number of Mr. Greeley's political friends called and expressed much sorrow at the death of Mrs. Greeley, and sympathy for the affliction of their leader.

A card has been issued inviting "the friends of Commissioner Samuel A. Lewis, of the Department of Public Instruction," to a meeting this evening. Mr. Lewis is a candidate for Alderman, and it is rather questionable taste to have sent this circular to school teachers and janitors of schools.

A meeting of the Germans of the Fifth Assembly District, Charles Willet presiding, was held at No. 69 Vandam-street, last night. The nomination of Henry Wisser, the Republican and Reform candidate for Assistant Alderman, and the rest of the Reform ticket, was indorsed.

A meeting of the Fifteenth Assembly District Grant and Wilson Campaign Club was held last night at No. 246 West Thirty-third-street, Mr. Hugh Turner in the chair. Mr. Wm. Pebbie delivered an address on the issues of the campaign. He urged the necessity of making all necessary exertions to contribute to the glorious victory of next Tuesday.

Pool-Selling on the Election—The Scenes at the Rooms Last Night.

Johnson's saloon, under Apollo Hall, at the corner of Broadway and Twenty-eighth-street, was crowded with gentlemen, representing all grades of society, from 8 o'clock last evening up to an early hour this morning. Mr. Johnson commenced with pools on the Mayoralty, the speculator starting with $100, which pool sold as follows: Havemeyer, $100; O'Brien, $90; Lawrence, $8. Several pools at the same rates were afterward sold, after which a pool of $100 was sold at the following price: O'Brien, $100; Havemeyer, $90; Lawrence, $9. A speculator put up a few fifties that Greeley would obtain 20,000 majority in the City, which were sold at prices ranging from $35 to $40, while pools worth $50, that Dix would gain the Governorship by 10,000 majority, were knocked down, as a rule, as follows: Dix, $50; Kernan, $25. A pool of $100, started by a speculator, that Grant would carry Ohio by 20,000 majority, was sold at $100 positive, negative $50.

Greeley stock was dull. Several pools of $100 and $50 were put up there, but not one sold the whole time our reporter was present. A single pool of $50, that Fernando Wood would carry the Ninth Congressional District, sold—Wood, $50; Darling, (his opponent,) $25.

To summarize the whole proceedings of the evening, it may be said that the betting on Havemeyer and O'Brien is even, and that the speculating on Lawrence's chance has declined at least twenty-five per cent. since last night, while in reference to the State election, the Republican candidates are almost universally the favorites. It is almost unnecessary to add that Greeley stock remains as stagnant as it did on Tuesday night.

Hon. John A. Griswold.

A dispatch was received at this office at 2 o'clock this morning, stating that John A. Griswold, within the last twenty-four hours, had shown slight, but unmistakable signs of improvement.

A ROUSING RALLY.

the third cousin of the President's wife." [Applause.] And here is another one. The relation in this case is by Aaron Delano, whose aunt Susan married Capt. Noah Grant, great-grand-father of the President, [applause,] showing the very near relationship of the President with the nepotic Postmaster. [Laughter.] I want to understand that the magnitude of this issue depends on the degree of consanguinity. It is the Postmaster's brother-in-law's father's aunt married the President's great-grand-father, [loud applause and laughter,] and this brother-in-law of the man whose father's aunt was stepmother of Gen. Grant's grandfather [applause] holds the position of Postmaster now at the very aggravated figure of $350 a year. [Applause.] And this Mr. Greeley infers, shows what very little hope there is for the Republic. Well, the other great issue that Mr. Sumner made out in his sixteen-page speech, which made him sick and necessitated a trip to Europe—the other great issue against the President was his gift-taking. Now, Mr. Sumner asserts that never in this or in Europe was every great military officer who had his services recognized by pecuniary recompense. This, I will show, is untrue. Ten years ago Gen. McClellan won the battle of Antietem—a victory very grateful to the people of this country. In the ensuing Winter the personal and political friends of Gen. McClellan presented to him with a house, for which they paid seventy-five thousand dollars. Gen. McClellan not wishing to reside in it, sold it for a larger sum. Gen. Sherman, who deserves well of his country, [applause,] was presented with a house in St. Louis and another in Washington, with some eighty or one hundred thousand dollars in money. I never heard it stated it was a scandal on his part. I have heard generous men of both parties say it should have been ten times as much, so much did he do for his country. Gen. Grant has received the same amount. Farragut and Porter, our two great naval heroes of the war received as prize money more than a quarter of a million each. I don't think it was lower. Perhaps Judge Pierrepont could tell me. I can well understand how a naval hero is entitled to such a consideration at the hands of an appreciative public. I say that if Gen. Grant received as much as Porter, in comparison to the services he rendered, he would be richer than Astor or A. T. Stewart, because the present to which Gen. Grant would be entitled, would be the entire Southern Confederacy. There are men here before me whose minds run back to the great battles in Europe, fought by the Duke of Wellington, when he was sent to the Peninsula to confront Napoleon I., and try his power in open antagonism to him. When he drove Marshal Soult along the Pyrenees and conquered him, the English Parliament voted him, in a single evening, $500,000 in gold, and the Prince Regent, George IV. added five hundred thousand more. They gave him more than that—they gave him fifty thousand dollars a year pension. Two years after they canceled the pension, and gave him in a solid sum two million dollars in gold. That was before the battle of Waterloo was fought; and when the battle of Waterloo was fought, and news of victory received, the British Parliament gave him one and a half million in coin. He also received a present of a place in Strathfield worth $114,000 in gold. They made him Marshal of the Empire, and made him Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, with nothing to do. If you take the simple instance of what was given to Wellington, it shows it to be more than was received by Gens. Grant and Sherman altogether. The Duke of Wellington fought in a war carried on through ambition. They were not wars that involved the perpetuity of the English nation. Gen. Grant won a victory which preserved the life of your nation. [Applause.] If the South had succeeded, they would have no necessity for discussing his candidature for the next Presidency.

WHAT GEN. GRANT DID FOR THE COUNTRY.

He did more for his country than Wellington did for his at the battle of Waterloo. Here the speaker went on at considerable length, showing that every great nation always rewarded pecuniarily its great and successful men, and added that since Gen. Grant took the oath of office on the 4th of March, 1869, he has never received from any man any present in any form. He spoke of Gen. Sherman briefly and in good terms, and alluded to the perfidious attacks of the Tribune on President Grant and the Administration. Gen. Grant's Presidency for the past four years was in every respect superior to the policy of the eight years previous to it. In conclusion the speaker quoted the language of the great apostle, which speaks of nations and individuals being made strong to resist the arms of the alien, &c.

The Chairman then introduced Hon. Wm. M. Evarts, Commissioner to the Geneva Arbitration, who, he said, had just returned with $15,000,000 in his pocket.

Mr. Evarts was received with great cheers. He said:

SPEECH OF HON. WM. M. EVARTS.

When, last night, at nearly 12½ o'clock, the pilot-boat brought to us some numbers of the daily papers, and I saw from the columns of the TIMES [cheers for the TIMES] that to-night was to be held, at the Cooper Institute, the last weekly meeting of the Republican Party, I determined that I would be here as one of the listeners to the distinguished public men who were to address you. [Applause.] For nearly a year withdrawn from all participation in public debates in this country, however great my interest in them, I had but one excuse, that it was on a public errand, and in your name that I was absent. [Applause.] Returning now, not without being watchful in my absence of the strange political occurrences that were passing at home, I, for three months at least, have known and felt that every issue, National, State and City in favor of the Republican Party and a pure and just Government, was entirely safe. [Applause.] Having that feeling, I can submit with what composure I may to the melancholy result of the very wise and stringent Election law—that I shall not be able to vote myself, [laughter,] but I assure you that in Europe, in the estimate of the wise and just public men of the great countries associated with us in making up the system of our civilization, the issue and the treatment of that issue which is to result in the election of Gen. Grant [cheers] is but a new evidence that in the wisdom of the people and in the favor of Providence, the American nation has some protectors. [Cheers.]

The meeting then broke up, with cheers for Grant, Wilson and Dix.
